

Those Atrocious 'Great Debates'

November 10, 1960 25¢

RR

Reports On Africa

THE REPORTER

TO DEMONSTRATE TO YOU IN A SHORT TRIAL THE ADVANTAGE OF

Any Three of these

IF YOU AGREE TO BUY THREE ADDITIONAL BOOKS FROM THE CLUB WITHIN A YEAR . . . AT THE

186. HAWAII by JAMES A. MICHEENER (Retail price $6.95)

104. ADVISE AND CONSENT by ALLEN DRURY. (Retail price $5.75)

198. THE LEOPARD by GIUSEPPE DI LAMPEDUSA. (Retail price $4.50)

416. BORN FREE by JOY ADAMSON. Illustrated. (Retail price $4.95)

421. PORTRAIT OF MAX by N. BEHRMAN. Illustrated. (Retail price $6)

430. THE CHILD BUYER by JOHN HERSEY. (Retail price $4)

417. WALK EGYPT by VINNIE WILLIAMS (Retail price $4.50)

409. THE AFFAIRS OF WOLFS by C. P. NOWELL. (Retail price $4.50)

418. THOMAS WOLFE: A BIOGRAPHY by ELIZABETH NOWELL. (Retail price $3.95)

405. DOCTOR SCHWEITZER OF LAMBARENE by NORMAN COUSINS Illustrated. (Retail price $3.95)

191. GRANT MOVES SOUTH by BRUCE CATTON (Retail price $6.50)

108. ACT ONE by MOSS HART. (Retail price $5)

102. DOCTOR ZHIVAGO by BORIS PASTERNAK. (Retail price $5)

101. EXODUS by LEON URIS. (Retail price $4.50)

107. JOHN PAUL JONES by SAMUEL ELIOT MORSON. Illustrated. (Retail price $6.50)

400. THIS IS MY GOD by HERMAN WOUK. (Retail price $3.95)

113. ANATOMY OF A MURDER by ROBERT TRAVER (Retail price $4.50)

187. THE DAWN OF THE DARK AGES by ROBERT TRAVER (Retail price $3.95)

126. THE AFFLUENT SOCIETY by JOHN KENNETH GALBRAITH. (Retail price $5)

129. THE DEAD SEA SCROLLS by MILLER BURROWS Illustrated. (Retail price $6.50)

414. THREE BY TEY: MYSTERY NOVELS by JOSEPHINE TEY. (Retail price $4.50)

150. STUDIES IN THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SEX by HAVELOCK ELLIS. 2 vols. (Retail price $15) Each vol. $1

151. IDEAL MARRIAGE: Its Physiology and Technique by TH. H. VAN DE VELDE, M. D. Illustrated. (Retail price $7.50)

152. BARTLETT'S FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS by FRANCIS BARTLETT. 13th edition. (Retail price $10)

189. THE NEW OXFORD BOOK OF ENGLISH VERSE (Retail price $6)

190. THE OXFORD BOOK OF AMERICAN VERSE (Retail price $7)

159. VOGUE'S BOOK OF ETIQUETTE by MILLICENT FENWICK (Retail price $5.50)

ESPECIALLY RECOMMENDED

431
(RETAIL PRICE $10)

"One of the most spectacular stories ever told"—JOHN GUNTHER

"Should be required reading"—JAMES THURBER

"One of the most important works of history of our time"—ORVILLE PRESCOTT, N. Y. Times

"First to last—a masterly performance"—JOHN K. HUTCHENS
N. Y. Herald Tribune

"One of those rare histories that men will turn to for generations to come"—KAY BOYLE, N. Y. Post

411. FATHER BROWN OMNIBUS by G.K. CHESTERTON (Retail price $4.95) (Vol. I of A History of the English People. Price $5.95)

185. THE NATURAL HISTORY OF LOVE by MORTON HUNT (Vol. I of A History of the English People. Price $5.95)

19. THE BIRTH OF BRITAIN by JOHN S. CHESTERTON (Vol. I of A History of the English People. Price $5.95)

132. A STUDY OF HISTORY, a 2-vol. abridgment of the Toynbee work (Retail price $11) Each vol. $1

139. ULYSSES by JAMES JOYCE. Abridged. (Retail price $1.50) Each v. $1

149. THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY by WILL DURANT (Retail price $5)

149. THE STORY OF PHILOSOPHY by WILL DURANT (Retail price $5)

157. THE POPULAR MEDICAL ENCYCLOPEDIA by MORRIS FISHBEIN, M.D. (Retail price $10)

174. A CHILD'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD by MARK TWAIN (Retail price $5)

AGE OF MEMBERSHIP IN THE BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB...

Books for $1 each*

AT THE MEMBERS' PRICES WHICH AVERAGE 20% BELOW THE REGULAR RETAIL PRICES

14. THOMAS WOLFE, A BIOGRAPHY by ELIZABETH HOWELL. (Retail price $3.95)

413. THE GOOD YEARS by WALTER LORD, Illustrated. (Retail price $4.95)

193. TRUSTEE FROM THE TOOLROOM by NEVILLE SHUTE. (Retail price $3.95)

199. THE CONSTANT IMAGE by MARCIA DAVENPORT (Retail price $3.95)

87. THE DARKNESS AND THE DAWN by THOMAS COSTAIN. (Retail price $3.95)

114. WHAT WE MUST KNOW ABOUT COMMUNISM by HARRY and BONARO OVERSTREET. (Retail price $3.95)

105. THE UGLY AMERICAN by WILLIAM LEDERER and RENE BURDICK. (Retail price $3.95)

110. THE HARMLESS PEOPLE by ELIZABETH MARSHALL THOMAS. Illustrated. (Retail price $4.75)

19. THE BIRTH OF BRITAIN by WINSTON S. CHURCHILL, Vol. I of A History of the English-Speaking Peoples. (Retail price $6)

120. THE NEW WORLD by WINSTON S. CHURCHILL, Vol. II. (Retail price $6)

121. THE AGE OF REVOLUTION by WINSTON S. CHURCHILL, Vol. III. (Retail price $6)

122. THE GREAT DEMOCRACIES by WINSTON S. CHURCHILL, Vol. IV. (Retail price $6)

34. COMPLETE SHORT STORIES OF O. HENRY. 2 vols. (Retail price $12.50) Each vol. $1

135. COMPLETE WORKS OF O. HENRY 2 vols. (Retail price $10) Each vol. $1

136. COMPLETE SHERLOCK HOLMES by CONAN DOYLE. 2 vols. (Retail price $7.50) Each vol. $1

182. THE ALL NEW FANNIE FARMER COOKBOOK. 10th edition. Illustrated. (Retail price $4.95)

74. A CHILD'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD by V. M. HILLYER. Revised by E. G. HUEY. Illustrated. Both vols. for $1

162. A CHILD'S GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD by V. M. HILLYER. Revised by E. G. HUEY. Illustrated. Both vols. for $1

163. WINNIE THE POOH AND THE HOUSE AT POOH CORNER by A. A. MILNE. Illustrated by E. H. SHEPARD. Both vols. for $1

164. WHEN WE WERE VERY YOUNG AND NOW WE ARE SIX by A. A. MILNE. Illustrated by E. H. SHEPARD. Both vols. for $1

GOOD SENSE FOR EVERY READING FAMILY

THE PURPOSE of this suggested trial membership is to demonstrate two things by your own experience: first, that you can really keep yourself from missing books you fully intend to read. How many do you find right here? Second, the trial will demonstrate the advantages of the Club's Book-Dividend system, through which members regularly receive valuable library volumes — either completely without charge or at a small fraction of their price—simply by buying books they would buy anyway. The offer described here really represents "advance" Book-Dividends earned by the purchase of the three books you engage to buy later.

* The three books you choose will be sent to you immediately, and you will be billed one dollar for each volume (plus a small charge for postage and handling).

* You have a wide choice always—over 200 selections and alternates during the year.

* If you continue after this trial membership, with every second Club choice you buy you will receive, without charge, a valuable Book-Dividend averaging around $6.50 in retail value. Since the inauguration of this profit-sharing plan, $235,000,000 worth of books (retail value) has been received by members as Book-Dividends.

In the case of multi-volume sets, each volume is to be counted as a separate purchase at $1, unless otherwise noted

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, Inc.
345 Hudson Street, New York 14, N. Y.

A10511

Please enroll me as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club and send the three library volumes whose numbers I have indicated in boxes below, billing me $3.00 (plus postage and handling). I agree to purchase at least three additional monthly Selections—or Alternates—during the first year I am a member. I have the right to cancel my membership any time after buying three Club choices (in addition to those included in this introductory offer). The price will never be more than the publisher's price, and frequently less. After the third year, if I continue to buy three Book-Dividends* with every second Selection—or Alternate—I buy (a small charge is added to cover postage and mailing expenses.) PLEASE NOTE: A Double Selection—or a set of books offered to members at a special combined price—is counted as a single book in reckoning Book-Dividend credit and in fulfilling the membership obligation to buy three Club choices.

INDICATE BY NUMBER IN BOXES BELOW THE THREE BOOKS YOU WANT

(Please print plainly)

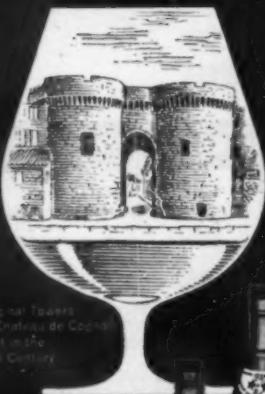

MR. MRS. MRS.

Address

City Zone State
Selections and Alternates for Canadian members are usually priced slightly higher, are shipped from Toronto post free, and may be paid for in either U.S. or Canadian currency.

*Trademark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. and in Canada

IMPORTED FROM FRANCE OTARD
COGNAC BRANDY

*The King of Cognacs ...from the Castle of Cognac.
Fondate en 1795*

The Only Cognac Made and Bottled at The Chateau de Cognac. IMPORTED OTARD COGNAC, V. S. O. P., 80 PROOF 3 STAR, 84 PROOF • SCHENLEY IMPORT CO., NEW YORK.

TO A $10,000 MAN WHO WANTS $14,747

Advice from
The Wall Street Journal

A recent survey shows that Wall Street Journal subscribers are earning more money than ever before.

For example, their median income is $14,747 a year. The average subscriber owns 7 suits ($90 each), 20 shirts ($6), and six pairs of shoes ($20). Many buy liquor by the case and cigars by the box.

We don't claim credit for the success of our readers, but we do feel that the knowledge they absorb from the pages of The Wall Street Journal helps them get ahead.

If you think The Journal is just for millionaires, you are WRONG! It is a wonderful aid to salaried men making $7,500 to $25,000 a year. It is valuable to owners of small businesses.

To assure speedy delivery to you anywhere in the U.S., The Journal is printed daily in seven cities from coast to coast. It costs $24 a year, but in order to acquaint you with The Journal, we make this offer: You can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $7. Just send this ad with check for $7. Or tell us to bill you. Address: The Wall Street Journal, 44 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y. RM 11-10

THE REPORTER

THE MAGAZINE OF FACTS AND IDEAS

MAX ASCOLI, Editor and Publisher

Executive Editor, Philip Horton • Managing Editor, Robert Bingham
Senior Editor, Gouverneur Paulding • Washington Editor, Douglass Cater Associate Editor, Cyrilly Abels • Art Director, Reg Massie
Assistant Managing Editor, Derek Morgan
Staff Writers: Claire Sterling, Marya Mannes, Paul Jacobs, Edmond Taylor
Assistant to the Managing Editor, Louisa Messolonghites • Librarian, Ruth Ames
General Manager, John J. Borghi
Circulation Manager, George Hinckley • Director of Advertising, Harry R. Davis Director of Promotion, Shirley Katzander • Production Manager, Ann Hollyday Sharp

VOLUME 23, NO. 8

NOVEMBER 10, 1960

THE REPORTER'S NOTES 10

Those Atrocious 'Great Debates'

INTERMEZZO—AN EDITORIAL Max Ascoli 18
NOTES FROM BACKSTAGE Douglass Cater 19

Reports on Africa

UNEASY ALLIES IN ALGERIA Isaac Deutscher 21
KENYA BRACES FOR FREEDOM Gordon Shepherd 24
CHINESE BEARING GIFTS Denis Warner 27
THE STRONG MAN OF GUINEA Lloyd M. Garrison 28
NEUTRALISM IN AFRICA W. A. Lewis 31

Impressions of Russia

DIALOGUE OF A TOURIST Marya Mannes 31

Views & Reviews

A CRY FROM THE BRICK STREETS John Rosselli 37
A FAR, FAR BETTER THING Jay Jacobs 42
THE ELECTRONIC GLOBE Albert Bush-Brown 45 Books:
SOUTH OF THE DREAM Ralph McGill 48
CAPPING THE SPRING John Kenneth Galbraith 52
WHAT HAPPENED TO THE FUTURE? Hilton Kramer 53
AN UNCANNY AIM Ann Birstein 55
EASTER DAWN Gouverneur Paulding 56
THE REPORTER PUZZLE 50

Editorial and Business Offices:

660 Madison Avenue, New York 21, N. Y.

Manuscripts or artwork submitted to The Reporter should be accompanied by addressed envelope and return postage. The publisher assumes no responsibility for the return of unsolicited manuscripts or artwork.

THE REPORTER, November 10, 1960, Volume 23, No. 8. Second-class postage paid at New York, New York, and at Dayton, Ohio. Published every other Thursday except for omission of two summer issues by The Reporter Magazine Company, 660 Madison Avenue, New York 21, N. Y. © 1960 by The Reporter Magazine Company. All rights reserved under Pan-American Copyright Convention. Subscription prices, United States, Canada, U.S. Possessions and Pan American Union: One year $6, Two years $9.50, Three years $12. All other countries: One year $7, Two years $11.50, Three years $15. Please give four weeks' notice when changing address, giving old and new address. Send notice of undelivered copies on Form 3579 to: The Reporter, McCall St., Dayton 1, Ohio. Indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature and Public Affairs Information Service.

4-11-28

A

Get This News
Retail $3.50.

The Creation of Woman. Theodore Retail $3.75. Member's price $2.75.

My Brother's K
Statinska Joyce Albert Camus: Invincible Some of the best books banned retail price $8.75. Member price (for both) $4.50.

SELECTIONS

Club has off are different readable books outstanding able to you benefits and pictorial ab acquire as m

CONVENIEN the books y veniently an an authorita available at

AVERAGE S books you ta Compare the amount to a

HONUS BOO free bonus bo

ent
4-11-28-61

Any 3 Books FREE

WITH YOUR FIRST SELECTION

Set This House on Fire, William Styron. Retail $5.95. Member's price $4.25.

The Affluent Society, John Kenneth Galbraith. Retail $5.00. Member's price $3.50.

The Age of Jackson, Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. Retail $6.50. Member's price $3.95.

The Crisis of the Old Order, Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. Retail $6.00. Member's price $4.50.

The Coming of the New Deal, Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. Retail $6.75. Member's price $4.75.

Advertisements for Myself, Norman Mailer. Retail $5.00. Member's price $3.75.

The Origins of Psychoanalysis: Sigmund Freud's Letters. Retail $6.75. Member's price $3.75.

The Greek Myths, Robert Graves. One volume edition. Retail $5.00. Member's price $3.75.

The Joy of Music, Leonard Bernstein. Retail $5.95. Member's price $3.95.

A History of Western Morals, Crane Brinton. Retail $7.50. Member's price $4.50.

Let Us Now Praise Famous Men, James Agee and Walker Evans. Retail $6.50. Member's price $4.95.

Selected Plays of Sean O'Casey. Retail $6.50. Member's price $4.95.

The Creation of Woman, Theodor Reik. Retail $3.75. Member's price $2.75.

The Odyssey: A Modern Sequel, Nikos Kazantzakis. Retail $10.00. Member's price $5.95.

The Mast of S. J. Perelman, S. J. Perelman. Retail $3.95. Member's price $3.95.

The Complete Work of Nathaniel West, Nathaniel West. Retail $5.00. Member's price $3.95.

The Holy Barbarians, Lawrence Lipton. Retail $5.00. Member's price $3.50.

Let Us Now Praise Famous Men, James Agee and Walker Evans. Retail $6.50. Member's price $4.95.

America as a Civilization, Max Lerner. Retail $10.00. Member's price $4.95.

My Brother's Keeper, William Styron. Retail $5.95. Member's price $4.25.

Streetwalker, Robert Heilbroner. Combined retail price $7.50. Member's price $4.50. (for both books) $4.50.

Shakespeare and Company, Sylvia Beach. Human Nature and the Human Condition, Joseph Wood Krutch. Combined retail price $8.45. Member's price $4.75.

J. B., Archibald MacLeish and Brave New World Revisited, Aldous Huxley. Combined retail price $6.50. Member's price $4.50.

A History of Sexual Customs, Richard Lerner. Retail $5.95. Member's price $4.50.

Images of Man: The Classical Tradition in Sociological Thinking, edited by C. Wright Mills. Retail $7.50. Member's price $4.95.

Identity and Anxiety: Survival of the Person in Modern Society, Edited by Maurice Stein, Arthur J. Vidich, and David Manning White. Retail $7.50. Member's price $4.75.

The Western Intellectual Tradition, Lorraine de Hege, J. Bronowski, and Bruce Mazlish. Retail $7.50. Member's price $4.95.

SELECTIONS MAKE THE DIFFERENCE! Here are some of the selections that the Book Find Club has offered its members at substantial savings. The selections of the Book Find Club are different. You will recognize them as works of current interest and lasting value—solid, readable books that range from social science to the fine arts. These are only a few from the outstanding list of more than 100 books and records that the Book Find Club will make available to you as a member if you join now. As an introductory offer, to acquaint you with the benefits and privileges of membership, we invite you to choose any three of the selections pictured above free with your first selection. Since several are dual selections*, you may acquire as many as 8 books in this way.

CONVENIENCE. Membership in the Book Find Club makes it possible for you to shop for the books you want in the comfort of your own home—enabling you to build your library conveniently and inexpensively. Each month you will receive The Book Find News, containing an authoritative review of the forthcoming selection and descriptions of the many other books available at special member's prices. You need choose only the books you want.

AVARAGE SAVINGS OF 40%. As a member you will regularly enjoy savings of 40% on the books you take. Furthermore, on certain choices your savings will reach and even exceed 50%. Compare the prices of the books shown here. Your savings on this introductory offer alone can amount to as much as $32.70.

BONUS BOOKS. When your initial commitment has been fulfilled, you will be entitled to a free bonus book of your own choosing after every third selection that you take.

* Two books counting as one selection

THE BOOK FIND CLUB

215 Park Avenue South, New York 3, N. Y.

You may enroll me as a member of the Book Find Club and send me the three free books of my choice with my first selection at the special member's price (for standard and combined selections) or at the regular price of $4.50 for alternates—in the next twelve months. When my initial commitment has been fulfilled, I will be entitled to a free bonus book of my own choosing after every third selection that I take. I am to receive each month without charge the Book Find News containing an authoritative review of the forthcoming selection and descriptions of the many other books available at special member's prices. I will be able to make my own choice; if I do not want the selection announced I can return your form saying "send me nothing" or use it to order another book from the more than 100 current choice titles offered. I may cancel my membership at any time after purchasing the five additional selections or alternates.

First Selection

Free Books 1

2

3

Mr. Mrs. Miss

Please print full name

Address

City

Zone State
Name offer and prices apply in Canada.
Address: 105 Bloor St., Toronto 2, Ontario

B60-111

Random House books for boys and girls

DANNY KAYE'S AROUND THE WORLD STORYBOOK

This big beautiful book glows with pictures on every page, many in full color — and with the warmth and irresistible charm of Danny Kaye himself. Gathered here are magical tales from every corner of the world. Boys and girls of all ages, and their parents, will treasure this book. $4.95

NEW LEGACY BOOKS

Exciting, versions of the great and enduring myths, legends and folk tales of long ago, retold by famous storytellers of today. Illustrated. Ages 9-12. Each, $1.50

MEDUSA'S HEAD

By JAY WILLIAMS. Illus. by Steele Savage.

THE SONG OF ROLAND

By ELEANOR CLARK. Illustrated by Leonard Everett Fisher.

THE ADVENTURES OF HERCULES

By CLIFTON FADIMAN. Illustrated by Louis Glanzman.

SINDBAD THE SAILOR

By NATHANIEL BENCHLEY. Illustrated by Tom O'Sullivan.

WILLIAM TELL

By KATHERINE SCHERMAN. Illustrated by Georges Schreiber.

NEW ALLABOUT BOOKS

"Dramatic, informative presentation of scientific subjects written by outstanding authorities in their fields." —INSTRUCTOR MAGAZINE

Ages 10 and up. Each, $1.95

ALL ABOUT THE PLANETS

By PATRICIA LAUBER. Illustrated by Arthur Herschaw.

ALL ABOUT FISH

Written and illustrated by CARL BURGER.

ALL ABOUT UNDERSEA EXPLORATION

By RUTH BRINDZEE. Photographs.

ALL ABOUT GREAT MEDICAL DISCOVERIES

By DAVID DIETZ. Illus. by Ernest Kurt Barth.

NEW LANDMARK BOOKS

"Offer adequate proof that fact can be more dramatic and absorbing than fiction."

—CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Ages 10 and up. Each, $1.95

HEROINES OF THE EARLY WEST

By NANCY WILSON ROSS. Illustrated by Paul Galdone.

THE ALASKA GOLD RUSH

By MAT MCNEER. Illustrated by Lynd Ward.

THE GOLDEN AGE OF RAILROADS

By STEWART H. HOLEROOK. Illustrated by Ernest Richardson.

FROM PEARL HARBOR TO OKINAWA

By BRUCE BLIVEN, JR. Photos and maps.

THE STORY OF AUSTRALIA

By A. GROVE DAY. Illustrated by W. R. LOHSE.

CAPTAIN CORTES CONQUERS MEXICO

By WILLIAM JOHNSON. Illustrated by Jose Cimelos.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE

By RUTH FOX HUMES. Illustrated by Robert Frankenberg.

Now at your bookstore RANDOM HOUSE

WHO- WHAT- WHY-

THIS ISSUE will reach a large number of our readers shortly after Election Day. In our next issue the returns will be discussed; this time Max Ascoli feels like thinking out loud about the campaign while awaiting the outcome. His decided preference for Kennedy has survived the test of the four Great Debates, and he is even ready to endure the test of a fifth. But certainly neither he nor our Washington Editor Douglass Cater has particularly enjoyed this new device of electioneering. Mr. Cater has followed both the Kennedy and the Nixon campaigns very closely and was chosen to be one of the reporters on the panel for the third debate. As far as The Reporter is concerned, the electoral season is over: the long election night has begun.

WE TAKE ADVANTAGE of this pause to look into the situation in Africa. In contrast to the Great Debaters, we are not exactly obsessed by Africa but certainly we think that what has happened in that continent is worth studying from many sides. We start with the Communists, whose leaders have shown more than a passing interest in African affairs. While Premier Khrushchev was banging his shoe on his desk at the U.N. General Assembly, his restive Chinese allies were indulging in some rather more subtle footwork behind his back—in company with Ferhat Abbas, head of the provisional government of the republic of Algeria. Isaac Deutscher discusses this new center of the Moscow-Peking rivalry. Maybe "rivalry" is not quite the word, but it does look as if here too the Chinese were acting as leaders of His Majesty Nikita's loyal opposition. . . . Kenya is to approach independence gradually. At next year's elections the Africans are assured of a political majority in their new parliament, but the British governor and his cabinet are to retain the ultimate executive power. Gordon Shepherd, Central European correspondent for the London Daily Telegraph, reports on what Kenya's leaders, black and white, think of this seemingly illogical solution to a patently illogical situation. . . . China's deals with Guinea are part of an undisguised attempt to establish a Chinese beachhead in Africa. Denis Warner, an Australian journalist who sends us regular reports from the Far East, agrees with the Peking People's Daily that Guinean President Sékou Touré's visit to Peking was "a momentous event . . . in the history of relations between China and Africa." . . . For all Touré's protestations that he and his country are "misunderstood" in the West, Lloyd M. Garrison, a freelance writer recently returned from Africa, found ample evidence in Guinea's capital a few weeks ago of a close understanding between the Guinean "strong man" and the Communist countries. . . . W. A. Lewis, principal of the University College of the West Indies in Jamaica, presents his own assessment of African neutralism. His observations are based on long experience: Until this March he was assistant managing director of the U.N. Special Fund under Paul Hoffman; he has also served as consultant to the Gold Coast and Western Nigerian governments and, for two years beginning in October, 1957, as adviser to Kwame Nkrumah. Mr. Lewis is the author of The Theory of Economic Growth, which has been translated into many languages and is regarded as a standard textbook in economics.

Marya Mannes has just returned from a visit to the Soviet Union.

John Rosselli, author of Lord William Bentinck and the British Occupation in Sicily (Cambridge), discusses the work of a young Englishman who has the rare ability to write of his native "brick streets" without self-consciousness. . . . Jay Jacobs, a frequent contributor, returns to his movie beat. . . . Albert Bush-Brown is associate professor and executive officer at the School of Architecture and Planning, M.I.T. . . . Ralph McGill is publisher of the Atlanta Constitution. . . . John Kenneth Galbraith's most recent book is The Liberal Hour (Houghton Mifflin). . . . Hilton Kramer is editor of Arts. . . . Ann Birstein is the author of The Trouble Maker (Dodd, Mead).

Our cover is by Gregorio Prestopino.

Have you read that passage? . . . Editorial, History, Century, of people, Prices, your int, most dis

FOOD FOR TAURS by Graves. The writing is eccentric, questioning. A production work. $4.95

YOURS

THE HOME INTELLIGENCE by Jacques. How intelligent is Western civilization, is it destroyed by culture in the art, science, philanthropy. YOURS

THE COLD WAR by NATHAN. Four original. The Day, custom, My hearts, The Life of R. A. Cool

$5.00

YOURS

WHICH 3 OF THESE FIRST-RATE BOOKS DO YOU WANT FOR $1 EACH?

Have you noticed that even though most books are reviewed favorably, many prove to be disappointing once you read them? To preclude such disappointments, The Mid-Century Book Society offers only those books that pass what we believe to be the toughest test: Each is read and approved by America's most distinguished editorial board—Jacques Barzun, W. H. Auden, and Lionel Trilling. Their selections from the fields of biography, history, superior fiction, drama, belles lettres, and current events are reviewed candidly in The Mid-Century magazine, received free each month by Mid-Century's booming membership, which includes scores of people whose names you would recognize because of their own contributions to the world of culture. The marvel of Mid-Century is that its first-rate books can save you up to 50% or more through member's prices and free selections. Surely there are three books below that you would want to own at only $1 each as your introduction to membership in America's most discriminating book service.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA
by Franz Kafka and FRANZ KAFKA: A BIOGRAPHY by Max Brod. (Dual Selection). Two remarkable volumes, by and about a giant of twentieth-century literature. $9.00
BOTH BOOKS $1

STRANGERS AND BROTHERS by U. P. Snow and LAUGHTER IN THE DARK by Vladimir Nabokov. (Dual Selection). Snow's novel is brilliant high tragedy, Nabokov's is cynical and more wicked than Lolita. $8.00
BOTH BOOKS $1

LET US SOW PRAISE FAMOUS MEN by James Agee and Walker Evans. An American classic, a work of true originality. $6.50
YOURS FOR $1

FOOD FOR CES-TARS by Robert Cravat. The latest writings of an eccentric but unquestionable genius. A perfect introduction to his work. $8.95
YOURS FOR $1

ORIGINS by Eric Partridge. A great new reference book that is indispensable to anyone who reads and writes. A superblymade, 970-page etymological dictionary with 20,000 entries.
$16.00
YOURS FOR $1

THE POEM ITSELF
edited by Stanley Burnshaw. A work of striking originality. Poems by 45 modern, foreign poets, followed by literal translations, interwoven with stimulating commentaries.
$6.50
YOURS FOR $1

THE END OF IDEOLOGY by Daniel Bell. Original, profound forays into our national character, status politics, work and its dis-contents, and crime as an American way of life.
$7.50
YOURS FOR $1

TWENTIETH CENTURY FARGO: AMERICAN AND BRITISH compiled by Burling Lowrey. Among the parodied: Joyce, Conrad, Faulkner, T. S. Eliot, Kerouac. Among the parodists: Brebohm, Perelman, Thurber. $8.75.
YOURS FOR $1

BORN THERE (La Basi) by J. K.
Huysmans. Blasphemous and decadent, it dwells on a weird world of sexual abnormality, erotic mysticism, incubism, succubism, and bestiality. $5.00
YOURS FOR $1

LOVE AND DEATH IN THE AMERICAN NOVEL by Leslie Fiedler. An entertaining, major study of American literature—wide in range, rich in content—by a controversial, first-rate critic.
$8.50
YOURS FOR $1

THE HOUSE OF INTELLECT by Jacques Barzun.
How intellect, the prime force in Western civilization, is being destroyed by our culture in the name of art, science, and philanthropy. $8.00
YOURS FOR $1

THE HENRY MILLER READER.
American censorship has prevented many of Henry Miller's books from being published.
The moral importance of his writings is acknowledged by all who know them.
$6.50
YOURS FOR $1

MOUNTOLIVE and CLEA (Dual Selection) by Lawrence Durrell. The third and fourth novels of the Alexandria Quartet, an extraordinary investigation of modern love. Retail $7.90.
•BOTH BOOKS $1

R-12
THE MID-CENTURY BOOK SOCIETY
115 East 31st Street, New York 16, N. Y.

Please enroll me as a member of The Mid-Century Book Society. Enter my FREE subscription to The Mid-Century magazine (the most talked-about new literary publication in many years) and begin my membership by sending me the three selections I have listed below. I need choose only five more selections at reduced prices during the coming year. In addition, for every four selections purchased (after the first 3 books at $1 each), I will receive a fifth selection FREE.

My three selections

JUSTINE and BALTHAZAR (Dual Selection) by Lawrence Durrell.
"I am astounding myself to the idea of regarding every (sexual) act as a process in which four persons are involved." $7.50
BOTH BOOKS $1

CHOOSE ANY THREE SELECTIONS
FOR $1 EACH

YOUR MOVE

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF NATHANAEL WEST.
Four brilliant, original novels:
The Day of the Locust, Miss Lonely-hearts, The Dream, Life of Balso Snell,
A Cool Million.
$5.00
YOURS FOR $1

NAME _____
STREET ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ ZONE _____ STATE _____

Please charge my account and bill me for my first three selections plus the small shipping expense.
 My check for $3 is enclosed. (Mid-Century will pay the postage.) (New York City residents please add 9¢ sales tax.)

CORRESPONDENCE

DRESS AND ACCESSORIES BY Saks FIFTH AVENUE

Luxurious adventure—a dram of Drambuie! Made with a base of finest Scotch whisky, and originally the personal liqueur of Prince Charles Edward, Drambuie has been made in Scotland since 1745 from Bonnie Prince Charlie's secret recipe.

Drambuie

The cordial with the Scotch whisky base

IMPORTED BY W. A. TAYLOR & CO., N. Y., N. Y. SOLE DISTRIBUTORS FOR THE U. S. A.

“A strongly-plotted, vigorously-told story of adventure in a place where all is unfair in love and war” —MAURICE DOLBIER, N. Y. Herald Tribune

DARKNESS VISIBLE

An exciting novel of Algeria today

By NORMAN LEWIS

$3.50, now at your bookstore
PANTHEON

ORVILLE PRESCOTT: “The resplendent colors and sardonic bitterness of Mr. Lewis' panoramic picture are arresting. His approach to the horrors of war and his weary resignation in the presence of cruelty, fanaticism and butchery both shock and provoke thought.”

—New York Times

KENNEDY AND THE CLERGY

To the Editor: Let me add my voice of appreciation to what will undoubtedly be a similar reaction among countless Protestant ministers for the Reverend John W. Turnbull's description of the inquisition of Senator Kennedy by the Houston Ministerial Association (“The Clergy Faces Mr. Kennedy,” The Reporter, October 13). Dr. Turnbull has laid his hand on the fact of paramount importance that Protestants are more on trial than is the possibility of the Pope's taking over the White House.

REV. ROBERT KEEVER
Immanuel Presbyterian Church
Langley-McLean, Virginia

To the Editor: The article by the Reverend John Turnbull of Austin seems a most pathetic reaction to the Houston meeting. The whole tone of the article suggests to the reader that the only real cause for remorse on the part of the writer is that Senator Kennedy acquitted himself so well as to make the gathered clergy look a little pale by comparison. Their pride suffered.

In fact, however, the Houston meeting did the senator and the nation a great service. There were issues of moment that needed to be clarified and faced. This was done in what was generally a reasonable and responsible manner. The great danger was, as Howard K. Smith pointed out, that this issue would assume undue proportions by being left in the half-light of submerged prejudice and partial awareness. To be sure, such encounters are often distasteful because they seem to coincide with the attacks of the bigots, but they are no less necessary on that score.

If this relatively minor issue has been laid to rest, then the Houston meeting deserves a large share of the credit.

REV. JAMES P. SHERMAN
First Congregational Church Charlevoix, Michigan

BRITISH LABOUR

To the Editor: The penetrating analysis by Mr. George Steiner of “The Decline of the Labour Party” (The Reporter, September 29) is marred only by one error and one omission.

In the first case, he seems to mistake the natural consequences of a prosperous society, organized under capitalism, as being something peculiar to America. Thus it follows that when any society achieves the pleasures and difficulties of high consumption and prosperity it is becoming Americanized. Surely the capitalist theorists, of whatever nationality, envisage TV sets, Mixmasters, cheap cars, and the general accoutrements of a high standard of living as the normal evolution of a capitalist economy.

Secondly, he omits to account for that mystique in British politics, the

To M BO in ac m pu ac E with LAR Archaeolog labored for continent hundreds of and cultures language ed publishing Paris is on acclaimed r world today ever a other book EVERYTHING KNOW ab here in a “reference” consulted f offers a r poetry and and prima time to the theatre, m folklore.
FROM OEN the animal nia... the and Norse inaccessible strange a Magyars a FROM PER To read o the exotic

To celebrate our Seventh Anniversary

MARLBORO BOOK CLUB invites you to accept this monumental publishing achievement

FREE
with your first selection

LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY

The only complete encyclopedia of World Mythology from pre-Biblical Egypt and pre-Homeric Greece to the farthest reaches of Africa, the Orient, and the Pacific. Illustrated with an incomparable assemblage of authentic Painting, Sculpture, Symbols, Idols, Ritual and Sacrificial objects, many rarely seen by western eyes.

To prepare the LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY, celebrated scholars in every field from Art and Archaeology to Linguistics and Ethnology labored for ten years—amassing from every continent the mythological traditions of hundreds of nations, people, tribes and cultures. The original French-language edition from the famous publishing house of Larousse in Paris is one of the most highly acclaimed reference works in the world today. This is the first edition ever available in English. There is no other book like it.

EVERYTHING YOU'VE EVER WANTED TO KNOW about world mythology can be found here in a few moments. Yet this great "reference" work is designed not only to be consulted for facts but read for pleasure. It offers a reading experience wrought of poetry and bestiality, of sorcery and grandeur and primal awe...a voyage backwards in time to the well-springs of man's literature, theatre, music, theology, architecture, and folklore.

FROM OEDIPUS TO SIEGFRIED. Here are the animal-headed deities of Egypt's religion of death...the planetary divinities of Babylonia...the unenclosed family history of the gods and goddesses of Greece and Rome (including episodes Bulfinch didn't mention)...the licentious legends and rites of Phoenicia...the great pagan heritage of the Celts and Norse and Slavs, much of it heretofore inaccessible to the general reader...the strange shamanistic cults of the ancient Magyars and Finns.

FROM PERSIA TO POLYNESIA AND PERU. To read on is to be plunged headlong into the exotic mysticism of the East...Zoroaster and the Magi...the cult of Mithra...the mysteries of Mani...the multitudinous gods and castes and epics of Hinduism...the exalting doctrines of the Buddha...the intensely practical mythology of the Chinese...and the exquisite legends that lie beneath the painting and poetry and drama of Japan. And here, as well, are the great mythic legacies of Negro Africa, the South Pacific, the Indians of North and South America...even the legends and witchcraft of the silent world of the Eskimos.

EXPERIMENTAL MEMBER-SHIP OFFER. LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY, with an Introduction by Robert Graves, is typical of the kind of book offered regularly to members of the Marlboro Book Club at reduced prices. Limited quantities have been set aside as Free Gifts for new members who join now.

It makes good sense to send for your free copy today, with your first selection chosen from the list at right.

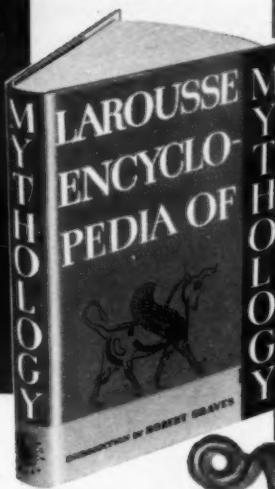

If not delighted, simply return the books within 2 weeks and your membership will be cancelled without cost or obligation. The Club takes all the risk. You see, this is no ordinary offer—and this is no ordinary book club.

ONLY 3 MORE SELECTIONS NEED BE TAKEN WITHIN ONE YEAR. The Marlboro Book Club pools your buying power with that of other discerning readers who share your tastes. By means of low Members' Prices and free Bonus Books, it saves you an average of 50% on the very books you would otherwise purchase at full price.

IMPORTANT TO ACT QUICKLY. Mail coupon today while free copies of LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY are still available.

PUBLISHED at $15

- 868 illustrations, some in full color
- A giant volume of oversize pages 8½" x 11½"
- Yours FREE with membership

Choose your first Selection now and receive free your $15 copy of the LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY

THE LAST TEMPTATION OF CHRIST. By Nikos Kazantzakis. "A searing, soaring, shocking novel."—Time. "An extraordinary work of art."—Saturday Review. List, $6.00. Members' Price $3.95

THE ANCIENT GODS. By E. O. James. Masterly study of the deities, cults and rituals of the ancient Mediterranean. 100 illustrations. List, $7.50. Members' Price $4.50

DUAL SELECTION—COUNTS AS ONE

FIRMAMENT OF TIME. By Loren Eiseley, author of The Immense Journey. How modern science has changed man's view of himself and his world.

THE LIBERAL HOUR. John Kenneth Galbraith, the author of The Affluent Society explodes still more of the myths that blind America to today's realities.

Combined List price $7.00

Combined Members' Price $4.50

EVERGREEN REVIEW. A Year's Subscription to America's most talked-about literary magazine. List, $5.00 per year. Members' Price $3.50 per year

THE LAST OF THE JUST. By Andre Schwarz-Bart. A book to stand in the rare company of The Wall. "This great novel is astonishing all who read it."—Le Monde. Winner of the Prix Goncourt. List, $4.95. Members' Price $3.50

THE WAR: A CONCISE HISTORY, 1939-1945. By Louis L. Snyder. Foreword by Eric Sevareid. "Electrifying reading."—Geoffrey Bruun. 640 pages, magnificently illustrated. List, $7.95. Members' Price $4.75

LIFE OF MICHELANGELO. By Charles H. Morgan. Illustrated with more than 100 exceptional plates. List, $6.00. Members' Price $3.95

HENRY MILLER READER. Edited by Lawrence Durrell. The best of Miller, including writings from banned works such as Tropic of Cancer. List, $6.50. Members' Price $4.85

CONCISE HISTORY OF MODERN PAINTING. By Sir Herbert Read. From Cezanne to Pollock. 495 plates, 100 in full color. List, $7.50. Members' Price $4.95

OF LOVE AND LUST. By Theodor Reik. Freud's most famous pupil analyzes the hidden nature of masculinity and femininity. List, $7.50. Members' Price $3.95

THE HOUSE OF INTELLECT. Jacques Barzun on the Sacred Cows of American culture. List, $5.00. Members' Price $3.50

THE STATUS SEEKERS. Vance Packard's eye-opening exploration of class behavior in America. List, $4.50. Members' Price $3.25

VAN GOGH. By Frank Elgar. His life and art, 360 reproductions, 67 Full Color Plates. List, $5.75. Members' Price $3.95

LIVES OF THE POETS. By Louis Untermeyer. The intimate lives of 133 great poets from Chaucer to Dylan Thomas. List, $7.95. Members' Price $4.50

MONUMENTAL NEW EDITION! ENCYCLOPEDIA OF JAZZ. By Leonard Feather. Completely up to date, 2,000 biographies, 200 photos. Truly THE definitive guide. List, $15.00. Members' Price $10.95

LIN YUTANG—THE IMPORTANCE OF UNDERSTANDING. Fabulous compendium of Chinese pleasures, wit, and wisdom through 2500 years. List, $6.00. Members' Price $3.95

HUMAN HEREDITY. By Ashley Montagu. What science has learned about human reproduction and human evolution. List, $5.00. Members' Price $3.50

THE PHENOMENON OF MAN. By Pierre Teilhard de Chardin. "One of the great books of the Twentieth Century."—Ashley Montagu. List, $5.00. Members' Price $3.50

THE NEW GOLDEN BOUGH. By Sir James G. Frazer, Ed. by Theodor H. Gaster. Completely revised in light of new anthropological discoveries. List, $8.50. Members' Price $5.95

COLLECTED ESSAYS OF ALDOUS HUXLEY. Huxley at his shocking best—on sex, art, psychoanalysis, narcotics. List, $3.00. Members' Price $3.50

PHILOSOPHY AND THE MODERN WORLD. By Albert W. Levi. The dilemma of modern man as exemplified in Sartre, Russell, Einstein, Dewey, Freud, Tornier, and Feuerbach. List, $5.00. Members' Price $4.50

THE WORLD OF ROME. By Michael Grant. What it was like to be a citizen of Imperial Rome during 1000 years of unparalleled power. Companion volume to The Greek Experience. List, $6.50. Members' Price $3.95

THE INTELLECTUALS. Wickedly revealing portrait of the smartest people in the world. Contributors include Camus, Elliot, Hock, Niebuhr, others. List, $7.50. Members' Price $4.50

—NO MONEY NEED BE SENT WITH COUPON—

MARLBORO BOOK CLUB 131 Varick St., N. Y. 18, N. Y.

Please enroll me as a Trial Member of the Marlboro Book Club and send me free: LAROUSSE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MYTHOLOGY. As my first Selection, send me, at the low Members' Price:

(Enter your First Selection here)

If for any reason I decide not to remain a member, I may return these books within 2 weeks and my membership will be cancelled without obligation. If I elect to remain a member I need choose only 3 more books at reduced prices during the coming year, and will be under no further obligation. Thereafter, every 4 books I accept from the Club will entitle me to a free Bonus Book of my choice.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

Please bill me for my First Selection plus shipping charge.
 My check for First Selection is enclosed (Club pays shipping). Same cancellation privileges.

MR 584

IN BRIDGE...

EXPERIENCE IS THE GREAT TEACHER

IN SCOTCH...

TEACHER'S IS THE GREAT EXPERIENCE

Charles Goren, World's Foremost Authority on Bridge

TEACHER'S
HIGHLAND CREAM SCOTCH WHISKY
BOTTLED IN SCOTLAND

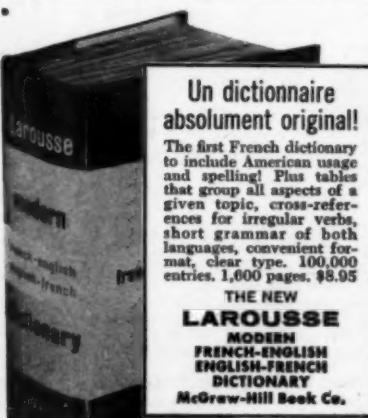

TEACHER'S HIGHLAND CREAM BLENDED SCOTCH WHISKY/86 PROOF/SCHEFFELIN & CO., N. Y.

POLITICS AND GRASS

THE ADMINISTRATION OF GRAZING ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN
BY PHILLIP O. FOSS

America's 142 million acres of range land and the Taylor Grazing Act, seen from political and historical viewpoints. The preliminary study won the first Western Political Science Association award (1957).

$4.50 at your bookseller, or UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON PRESS
SEATTLE 5

Establishment. "Socialism is the creed of the old," says Mr. Steiner, and points to the lack of youth among Labour's leaders and voters. The reason for this, he continues, is that the political creed of the socialists was unattractive to the youth liberated from the dismal past depicted by the Labour ethos. Unattractive as the present Labour Party image may be, this was not the sole reason for the decline of youth in Labour. The fact was that the Establishment opened its doors to the young middle-class and working-class graduates who were the "new elite." The Establishment's invitation of "Come in but have our values" was too tempting for these upstarts, so they bought the old school tie, took elocution lessons, and became the new bright young things of the Fringe Establishment. Some remained outside and threw mud at the new spongelike form of the old Establishment; this group, epitomized by playwright John Osborne, has now suffered a similar eclipse.

Thus, while Professor Titmuss tells us of our irresponsibility, Professor Galbraith of the "corporate" danger, and Mr. Packard of our social waste, socialism, a possible answer to some of these problems, produces almost the same traumatic effect in Britain as in the United States. One might well mourn the death of this sobering influence on an exuberant society.

J. W. J. HARROD
Cleveland, Ohio

To the Editor: May I as a visiting Englishman say how much I enjoyed George Steiner's article? I am sure it contains a good deal of truth—but some fiction. Mr. Steiner in his anxiety to clinch a good case exaggerates the gloom of Englishmen in the past and the puritanism of the Labour Party itself.

The English working class has never been so depressed or depressing as he makes out. You will not get to know it by reading D. H. Lawrence and certainly not George Orwell, who never so much as scratched the skin of one of those queer people he wanted to be friendly with at the same time he was giving them a clinical examination. The English working classes are a great variety of people; they are not "masses," not yet anyway, but very much individuals. Few generalizations about them carry much conviction, but I would venture this one: that they were never so glum, whether politically conscious or not, as Mr. Steiner seems to think. These people have always had sources of happiness that will not be found in the jumbo-sized cornucopias of the Tory Party.

IVAN ROOTS
Lafayette College
Easton, Pennsylvania

To the Editor: George Steiner's view of "The Decline of the Labour Party" is a rare old muddle—though exciting. May I, both as a political scientist and a persistent dead-center man in the British

Labour is this denly has on in this opposite necessa per cent

Second history always servative servative on Lab success amateur the wo

Third readily left-wing Party. cannot without Labour
—that's "fundame not an what i sentati interes tainly, socialis that th

It tough

THE
To th Claire her ar
The R vious all fair tion no Lumini

Nat happy really for a nation small ones, time convic some bring, to the country

Year on a loon asked about very of res lå." T turies
"The

Labour Party, be more dull? First, what is this panic about? Have people suddenly realized that the Labour Party has only won a working majority once in this century? It is, alas, the normal opposition party. (Do two-party systems necessarily alternate?) But its forty-four per cent is remarkably solid.

Secondly, at no period in the party's history has internal strife not thriven—always generously reported by the Conservative press. (Even with the Conservatives in power, reportage centers on Labour, ignoring that struggle for succession which has dumped a great amateur cricketer, the Earl of Home, on the world as British Foreign Secretary, to keep an able man out.)

Thirdly, Mr. Steiner accepts far too readily what is both the Tory and the left-wing stereotype of the Labour Party. "Ideological parties," he says, cannot change "fundamental ideas without losing their identity." But the Labour Party plainly is not ideological—that's what the row is all about. Its "fundamental" political strength (I'm not an authority on "ideas") arises from what it was founded to be—the representative in Parliament of the diverse interests of organized labor. Labor, certainly, has needed the talent of the socialists, but it is pure silliness to think that the Labour Party has ever been simply socialist.

It will survive. Some of us have tough nerves.

BERNARD CRICK
Cambridge, Massachusetts

THE BELGIANS AND AFTER

To the Editor: I wish to commend Claire Sterling for the general tone of her article ("Why the Belgians Failed," The Reporter, October 13) and the obvious effort made to present the case in all fairness and also after due investigation not only in the offices of Mr. Patrice Lumumba but also in Brussels.

Naturally, as a Belgian, I cannot be happy about the title. Did the Belgians really fail? Can we be held responsible for a character like Lumumba? He is a national calamity, to be compared, if small things may be compared to large ones, to Mussolini and Hitler. It takes time to destroy such characters. The convulsions will probably not cease for some time; but whatever the future may bring, the Belgians will be able to point to the Congo and say, "We built this country."

Years ago, on a dark night, I was lost on a bumpy country road in the Wallon country. I finally met a farmer and asked him for directions. He told me about the road, saying that it was a very old one and he added with a note of respect: "Les Romains ont passé par là." The Belgians trust that, many centuries from now, the Congolese will say, "The Belgians were around here."

JAN-ALBERT GORIS
Commissioner of Information
Belgian Government Information Center
New York

How to see Britain for $100 a week— without skimping

MANY AMERICANS are surprised to find that you can have the time of your life in Britain on $100 a week.

It's anything but a skimpy, Spartan sort of vacation. Most prices in Britain just happen to be lower than in the U. S. For instance:

$3.50 a night is the average price for bed and hearty breakfast in Britain's charming country inns. You can stay in a good London hotel for about $6.00—breakfast included.

$1.00 buys a good pub lunch just about anywhere in Britain. Dinner will cost you around $2.50 in London, $1.60 when you're touring.

35 cents buys a Scotch and soda; 14 cents, a foaming half-pint of ale.

$2.40 is ample for an orchestra seat in London's theatres; $3.50 at the Covent Garden Opera. The best seats at the Shakespeare Season of Plays at Stratford-upon-Avon (Spring through Fall) cost you about $2.50.

14 cents (one shilling) is the price of admission to the Tower of London (see

Typical expenses on a two-week vacation in Britain

3 nights in London (including breakfast) .	$18.00
11 nights in country inns (including breakfast) .	38.50
14 lunches with half-pint of ale	16.00
14 dinners with highball.	33.00
500 miles by train.....	13.00
Car hire, one week (800 miles)	50.00
Sightseeing	4.00
3 nights at the theatre ..	7.20
Incidentals	20.00
TOTAL	$199.70

Transatlantic fares will also surprise you. From October 1 through March 31, you can travel from New York to London and back for as little as $320 by air, $338 by sea.

the Crown Jewels for another 14 cents); Dickens' House (London); Milton's Cottage (Chalfont St. Giles).

4 cents is all you pay to visit the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew. Over four hundred British castles and mansions are open. Average price: 35 cents.

Free! You don't pay a ha'penny for the Lord Mayor's Show (November); Changing of the Guard (almost every day); Trooping the Colour (June).

2.6 cents a mile is the price of economy train travel in Britain. You can go all the way from London to Edinburgh and back for $19.88.

$36.40 rents a drive-it-yourself car for a week, September through June. (You pay about 25 per cent more in July and August.) Insurance included. No charge per mile. Gas for about 800 miles: $13.60. Total $50.

Come in Spring or Fall. You save money—and roads are uncrowded.

$5.60 is the fare for a leisurely three-day boat trip from Kingston to Oxford—and you pay equally friendly prices for meals and lodging along the way. You can rent a canoe for less than $12 a week; a six-berth boat for about $70.

$17 for cashmere sweaters; $12 for good woolen skirts; $15 for leather handbags. Men's woolen socks for $1; hats for $7; Scottish tweed jackets for $25.

$500 duty-free. You can bring home $500 worth of British goods per person without paying duty at U. S. customs.

Free travel aids. Before you plan your vacation in Britain, see your travel agent. And send for your free British travel aids—including maps, descriptions of coming events in Britain, and a lot of other information that's great fun to pore over. Write British Travel Association, Box 310. In New York—680 Fifth Avenue; in Los Angeles—606 So. Hill St.; in Chicago—39 South La Salle St.; in Canada—90 Adelaide St. West, Toronto.

Vance Packard examines the "throwaway age" in America. His book is disconcerting the business community ... winning praise from press, pulpit, and noted experts.

Lead editorials and front-page stories in Fortune, Wall Street Journal, Printer's Ink, and Barron's reveal the concern with which business leaders view THE WASTE MAKERS. Enthusiastic comments like those below show why! They are pouring in from all over the nation.

N. Y. TIMES: "... enough to make anyone who ever bought a refrigerator, a television set or a living room rug shudder ... should certainly be pondered by men in the White House, the Capitol and the Pentagon."

BISHOP JAMES A. PIKE: "This book must be the first word in a discussion which must ultimately lead to a real change in our American life."

FAIRFIELD OSBORN: "Vance Packard shatters our dream that wastefulness is desirable rather than ultimately destructive to the life of our nation. May his book have the widest reading."

STUART CHASE: "THE WASTE MAKERS should be widely read and pondered."

At all bookstores • $4.50

DAVID MCKAY CO., INC., New York

THE REPORTER'S NOTES

The Bishop of Ponce

As if we hadn't had enough in our own campaign of the religious issue, of anti-Catholic fanaticism, and of anti-anti-Catholic counterfanaticism, now we have a clerical political party for the first time established on American soil, and we have a Catholic bishop who seems to have been conjured up by some of our bitterest Catholic-baiters. We have in mind, of course, the Right Reverend James E. McManus, Bishop of Ponce, who, together with his two fellow bishops on the island, has undertaken the task of telling the Puerto Rican Catholics how they have to vote, and has gone so far as to warn them that if they vote for Governor Luis Muñoz Marín's party they are guilty of willful disobedience, and thus sinners.

We hasten to add that all we know about Bishop McManus is what we have read in the papers. He must be a singularly impressive man, a forceful shepherd who has brought to Puerto Rico, where he has been working since 1929, the tireless militancy of his native Brooklyn. According to what we have read, he has done remarkable things for his diocese, established a Catholic university, and contributed in his own way, for his own ends, to that amazing revival of Puerto Rico which will be forever linked to the name of Governor Muñoz Marín.

Disinclined as we are to get into theological hot water, we are inclined to think that Bishop McManus has rendered a service to Muñoz Marín. In a Latin country, anti-clericalism is always latent, and it only needs a little clerical interference in political affairs to acquire new and vigorous growth. This is an old, old story that may be, for some valid reasons, not so well known in Brooklyn or in Ireland as it is in Italy, where for more than a thousand years the Popes held temporal power. There has scarcely ever been a Catholic as devout as Dante, or a more resolute enemy of the Church in politics. In the Inferno he found all the Popes he had ever had anything to do with, and addressed them with Truman-esque vigor.

According to all reports, Muñoz Marín has never been so popular, so truly loved by his people as he is now. He deserves that popularity; and surely no harm has been done if Bishop McManus has greatly enhanced it.

A NUMBER of high ecclesiastical authorities have been drawn into the McManus controversy, including Cardinal Spellman and unnamed authorities at the Vatican. The variety of opinion among all these spokesmen for the Catholic Church has been truly remarkable. From the Vatican has come the statement that bishops have not only the right but also the duty, when they feel like it, to intervene in temporal matters. Or in other words, if they feel like it, right and duty can remain dormant. Cardinal Spellman does not seem to have been particularly happy with the behavior of Bishop McManus, and even one of his two Puerto Rican colleagues, Archbishop James P. Davis, seems to be in disagreement with Bishop McManus on the ques-

AFTER THE EIGHTH

Half of the people will be low,
Half of the people high;
The wind of change is bound to blow
Whether they beam or sigh.

All of the speeches, all the claims
Count for nothing now.
People have had their fill of Aims;
They wait for When and How.

All of the world is waiting too
With fearful breath to see Whether we know what we must do
And are as we must be.

—SEC

THE REPORTER

MASTERS OF WORLD ARCHITECTURE

"A cause for celebration," Allan Temko proclaimed in the New York Times Book Review. "Never before in this country has a series such as this been published, compact in format but nevertheless generously illustrated, written with high seriousness and intended not only for the professional architect and the student, but also for the public at large." The authoritative volumes that comprise the MASTERS OF WORLD ARCHITECTURE are an indispensable reference shelf on the men who have done most to determine the major trends of our time. The individual books combine informative analyses with profuse illustrations to show the scope of each master's work and provide answers to such questions as: Who is he? Which and where are his most important buildings? How does he fit into the total picture of architecture today? If you act now you may have the important new MASTERS OF WORLD ARCHITECTURE series (just published at a retail price of $29.75) for the special introductory price of $5, with membership in The Seven Arts Book Society.

6 Volumes Boxed—Each 7½" x 10" Volume Contains a Detailed Chronology, Bibliography, and Index plus 80 pp. of illus. and a 10,000 Word Text.

WRIGHT

By Vincent Scully, Jr. A concise statement of the sources from which F.L.W.'s architecture—and the images he sought to create—grew, and a new consideration of the master's relation to other arts, such as music, literature, and painting.

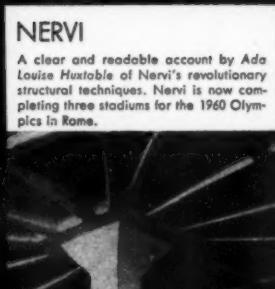

ALTO

Frederick Gutehain throws new light on the humanistic aspects of this great architect. Aalto is renowned for his unique innovations in industrial plant design and in employee housing in Finland.

NERVI

A clear and readable account by Ada Louise Huxtable of Nervi's revolutionary structural techniques. Nervi is now completing three stadiums for the 1960 Olympics in Rome.

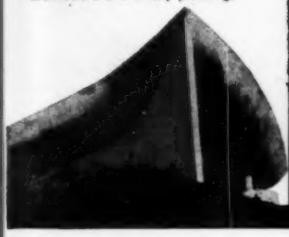

MIES VAN DER ROHE

Arthur Drexler fully explores the work of today's foremost exponent of classicism in architecture—exemplified in New York's Seagram Building.

LE CORBUSIER

By Françoise Choay. A revealing interpretation of a figure whose influence has been felt throughout the world in both architecture and in city planning.

GAUDI

By George R. Collins. The first extensive text in English to appear on this unique Spanish architect. Presents the full range of his surrealistic vision.

The seven arts BOOK SOCIETY

offers you the opportunity to build what André Malraux described as "a museum without walls"—to enrich your home with the finest books on the arts—at substantial savings. The selections of The Seven Arts Book Society—like those listed below—are all books of permanent value: oversize, richly illustrated volumes with definitive texts. Moreover, as a member you will regularly enjoy savings of 30% and more. Why not discover the great advantages of belonging to this unique organization today? You may begin your membership with the MASTERS OF WORLD ARCHITECTURE—itself a selection of The Seven Arts Book Society, and typical of the kind of books members regularly receive—at the special introductory price of $5.

OTHER RECENT SEVEN ARTS BOOK SOCIETY SELECTIONS

The Stones of Florence, Mary McCarthy. 277 pp., 8½ x 11, 137 photos. Retail $15.00. Member's price $10.95.
Paul Klee, Will Grohmann. 441 pp., 11½ x 8½, 510 illus. Retail $17.50. Member's price $13.50.
Great Paintings from the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Retail $17.50. Member's price $13.50.
The Great American Artists Series: Albert P. Ryder; Thomas Eakins; Winslow Homer; William de Kooning; Jackson Pollock; Stuart Davis. 6 vols., boxed. Retail $29.75. Member's price $16.95.
The Sculpture of Africa, Elton Erisson. 256 pp., 11 x 14, 405 photos. Retail $15.00. Member's price $10.95.
Rembrandt, Ludwig Münz. 9½ x 12¾. Retail $15.00. Member's price $11.95.
Space, Time and Architecture, Sigfried Giedion. 780 pp., 450 illus. Retail $12.50. Member's price $9.50.
Pablo Picasso, Wilhelm Seck and Jaime Sabartés. 824 pp., 8½ x 12, 406 illus. Retail $17.50. Member's price $13.50.
The Living City and The Natural House, both by Frank Lloyd Wright. Combined retail price $15.00. Member's price $11.95.
The Art of India, Louis Frederic. 426 gravure illus., 9 x 11, 464 pp. Retail $17.50. Member's price $12.95.

YOURS FOR $5
RETAIL PRICE $29.75

THE SEVEN ARTS BOOK SOCIETY
215 Park Avenue South, New York 3, N.Y.

You may enter my name as a member and send me the MASTERS OF WORLD ARCHITECTURE series for only $5.00 (plus postage and handling). I agree to take as few as six additional selections in the course of my membership. I am to receive each month without charge the attractive Seven Arts News containing an extensive review of the forthcoming selection and descriptions of all other books available to me at member's prices. If I do not want the selection announced I can return your simple form saying "send me nothing," or use it to order another book from the more than 100 authoritative volumes offered in the course of a year. I may cancel my membership at any time after purchasing the six additional selections.

Mr.
Mrs.
Miss

Address

Please print full name

City

Zone

State

S60-111

Favor yourself with Fundador the classic brandy of Spain. What full-bodied flavor, what richness! Yet incomparably smooth, in a cordial, a cocktail, or a Coffee Royale. Pedro Domecq Spanish Brandies, 86 proof. Imported by Canada Dry Corporation, New York, N. Y.

THE CHILD BUYER

A new novel by

JOHN HERSEY

author of The Wall,
The War Lover, & other novels

This imaginary, utterly absorbing record of the investigations of an unnamed state senate into the activities of a man who buys children is a biting commentary on some aspects of American education and democracy.

A powerful affirmation of faith in individuality, in integrity, and in the young.

$4.00 at better bookstores everywhere

ALFRED A. KNOFF

Publisher of Borzoi Books

tion of the sinfulness of voting for Muñoz Marín.

All this simply proves what so many people in our country, in this torrid period of anti-Catholic controversy, have forgotten, or maybe never known. Simply stated, it is that the Catholic Church is an immensely pluralistic organization. Each bishop enjoys a very broad range of autonomy, an autonomy that has been greatly enlarged by Pope John XXIII. The notion of a Catholic Comintern, and of a Vatican ruling over the faithful à la Kremlin—all this is plain lunacy.

There is a good chance now that this idea may get across to a number of people hitherto misinformed or uninformed. If this happens, it will be all to the good of Jack Kennedy, Muñoz Marín, and even the Catholic Church, to which, come to think of it, Bishop McManus may have rendered a service.

The Microcosm

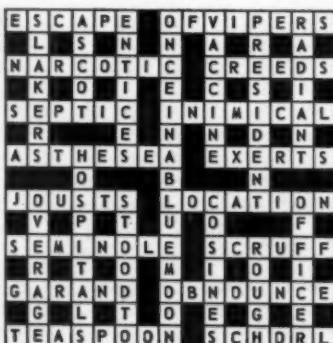

While the two young candidates for Congress debated the issues before a Hadassah meeting in Manhattan not long ago, the easily distracted ladies nodded and smiled among themselves at the mention of something good ("Franklin Roosevelt"), fussed with their enormous handbags at the mention of something complex ("multilateral loans administered through the United Nations"), and appeared generally to view the proceedings as a difficult choice between two equally acceptable sons-in-law. "They're both good," they said. "And so smart," they added, expressing a widespread sentiment among voters in New York's Seventeenth District, where Republican Representative John V. Lindsay and Democratic-Liberal candidate William J. vanden Heuvel have been battling to represent what is probably the wealthiest, most heterogeneous, and most politically sophisticated constituency in Congress.

The diversity and uniqueness of this Manhattan district is clear from the sorts of audiences before whom the candidates have appeared jointly and singly: a rally in the east Thirties sponsored by a group of people wearing American Colonial outfits and beginning with a benediction in which the Almighty was entreated

Solution to

THE REPORTER

Puzzle #18

Acrostician—

DR. JONAS E. SALK

America's women wield some mighty "clubs"!

IN 1868 an American newspaper woman, Mrs. Jennie June Croly, was barred from a press club testimonial dinner for Charles Dickens because she was a woman. Angry and determined, she and eleven of her newspaper sisters formed "Sorosis," America's first women's club. Today, less than a century later, over 35,000,000 American women are women's club members. Joining together to accomplish good things that no one woman could do alone, these women are organized into more than 200,000 varied and useful clubs.

Just how mighty are these women's clubs? Mighty enough to play a major role in the formation of the first Federal Child Labor Law. Mighty enough to become a strong force in the adoption of the Pure Food and Drug Act and workmen's compensation acts. Today they build community hospitals...fill libraries...support churches...contribute to the public welfare of every community in our country.

Does your wife belong to a women's club? Why did she join? Isn't it because she knows that her desire to improve her own family's life must extend beyond her own home. She knows this desire must reach out into her local community, to her country, and the world.

There are many ways in which your wife works to bring better living into your home. Some are big—like her membership in a women's club. Some may be small—like the little luxuries she brings home with S&H Green Stamps.

Whether your wife is seen in her role as one of the millions of women, shopping for half the families in America, who save S&H Green Stamps or as a member of one of the thousands of women's clubs serving communities across the nation, you can be sure she has but one basic goal—the happiness of her family.

An American Way of Thrift for 24,800,000 Families...

S&H GREEN STAMPS

Distributed since 1896 by The Sperry and Hutchinson Company

(A Burnished, Emphatic Flavour Guide)

WHAT DOES IRISH WHISKEY TASTE LIKE?

IT is very hard, we [The Whiskey Distillers of Ireland] find, to describe a flavour except in comparison to other flavours. So here we shall try to show more or less where burnished, emphatic Irish Whiskey falls in the taste spectrum:

Thus, if you know what Scotch and American Whiskies taste like you can get some idea of what to expect from Irish Whiskey. But what cannot be shown on any chart is how thoroughly you will enjoy the delicious differences of Irish Whiskey now you know what to taste for.

©1960, THE WHISKEY DISTILLERS OF IRELAND, BOX F186, DUBLIN

Greek oracles didn't have the answer to Christmas gift problems, but we do.

See page 41.

"A major breakthrough in social criticism... one of the most important books to have appeared in America in a decade."

—NORMAN PODHORETZ, Commentary

GROWING UP ABSURD

A THOUGHTFUL MAN'S REACTION TO A WORLD THAT NO LONGER MAKES SENSE

By Paul Goodman

$4.50, now at your bookstore
RANDOM HOUSE

DON'T QUIT SMOKING

...Before Giving My Pipe a Trial!

New principle that contradicts every idea you've ever had about pipe smoking. I guarantee it to smoke cool and mild hour after hour, day after day, without rest without bite, bitterness or sludge. To prove it, I'll let you try a new Carey Pipe. Send name today for my FREE complete trial offer. Write to: E. A. CAREY, 1920 Sunnyside Ave., Dept. 313-M Chicago 46, Ill.

A revealing, first-hand account of the birth of Israel, and of the three men who shaped its destiny... Bevin, Ben-Gurion, and Chaim Weizmann. "The clearest and most succinct exposition available in English today."

—THE NEW YORKER

A NATION REBORN

By RICHARD H. S. CROSSMAN

$3.50, now at your bookstore
Atheneum Publishers

to keep us from relying on "government doles"; a debate before a largely Republican audience where Republican Lindsay received his biggest hand when he indicated how far and how often he had strayed from Eisenhower conservatism; a debate at the New School sponsored by the Greenwich Village Council on World Affairs and local branches of Tammany Hall, the reform Democrats, the Republican Party, the Liberal Party, the A.D.A., the United World Federalists, the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, and the Socialist Party, where the audience booted a questioner who had brought up Quemoy and Matsu as if to demonstrate that it understood the issue and didn't care to waste precious questioning time on it.

Although the questions the candidates had undertaken to discuss that evening included such tough ones as "China and the U.N." and "proposals to facilitate a return to a peacetime economy," they debated with a fluency and frankness that would have put the nationally televised Great Debaters to shame. The United States must present to the next General Assembly, Lindsay stated, a list of conditions under which we would no longer seek to keep the subject of Chinese admission off the agenda. China must be brought into disarmament negotiations, Vanden Heuvel insisted; U.S. foreign policy cannot continue to be made in Formosa; Formosa's permanent seat on the Security Council must be relinquished, preferably to India.

In the Seventeenth District, however, with its preponderantly Democratic-Liberal registration and its current civil war between Tammany Hall and the Democratic reform movement, sometimes far simpler questions are harder to deal with. Vanden Heuvel, who is running with both Tammany and reform endorsement, is frequently called upon to disavow his regular backing; despite the fact that Herbert Lehman is chairman of his citizens' committee and that he is supported by all the reform clubs in his district, the claim for total and exclusive loyalty has died hard among some of the more single-minded insurgents. As for Lindsay, when asked whether he stands on the record of the administration, he has responded that he

A poet share of wri actress
... che newsb to the hours thousa

no do thoug where are yo broad

THREE SCRIPTWRITERS FOR NOVEMBER

A poet, a novelist, a prime minister—and you as a voter—all share credits for November's television, along with hundreds of writers for stage, screen, newsroom, and rostrum . . . actors, actresses, directors . . . composers, lyricists . . . costumers, set designers . . . choreographers and photographers.

And part of the mile-or-so script is also the unrehearsed newsbreak, panel show, interview, and flying tackle. That's a clue to the logistics of television with its more than ten thousand hours of network programming in the broadcasting year and thousands more on your local stations.

A wide range of talent serves a wide range of interests—no doubt, including yours. There are more absorbing hours for thoughtful viewers of television than you'll find almost anywhere outside a library or campus.

Be sure to check your daily television schedule. Chances are you'll find programs like those listed here—as well as local broadcasts—that you won't want to miss.

In November

A FEW PROGRAMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

(Times indicated are current N.Y. time)

"What's the Proposition?"

A special pre-election study on how an indifferent electorate ratifies propositions by default, on "Close-up!"

Thursday, November 3 (10:30-11 PM)

"Presidential Countdown"

Friday, November 4 (9:30-10 PM)

"The Campaign—the Candidates"

Saturday, November 5 (9:30-10:30 PM)

"Campaign Roundup"

Sunday, November 6 (2:30-3 PM)

Full Coverage of the Elections

Tuesday, November 8

"The Trapped Housewife"

A look into the demands made on the modern homemaker's time.

Thursday, November 10 (4-5 PM)

"The Influential Americans"

An on-the-scene report of new experiments in public school teaching.

Sunday, November 13 (9-10 PM)

"He Shall Have Power"

The institution of the American Presidency is examined on "Omnibus."

Sunday, November 13 (5-6 PM)

"Story of a Family"

Three generations of an American family are studied to determine the effects of changes during the last 60 years.

Monday, November 14 (7:30-8:30 PM)

"Macbeth"

Maurice Evans and Dame Judith Anderson star in Shakespeare's tragedy, filmed on location in Scotland and England.

Sunday, November 20 (6-8 PM)

"Big City 1980"

Second in series of four special programs on the age of technology, produced in cooperation with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Monday, November 21 (9:30-10:30 PM)

"Those Ragtime Years"

A "Project 20" recreation of an exuberant American era.

Tuesday, November 22 (10-11 PM)

"Winston Is Back"

Winston Churchill returns to office as World War II starts. First in new documentary series based on the statesman's memoirs and speeches. Richard Burton and Hume Cronyn are narrators.

Saturday, November 26 (10:30-11 PM)

"The U-2 Incident"

Hard realism at a crucial time in American history, on "White Paper."

Tuesday, November 29 (10-11 PM)

"The Three Musketeers"

A two-hour dramatization of Alexandre Dumas' swashbuckling novel. Presented on successive nights in two installments. Wednesday, November 30, and Thursday, December 1 (7:30-8:30 PM)

REGULARLY SCHEDULED PROGRAMS

Sundays: Television Workshop College News Conference
Chet Huntley Reporting
Meet the Press

The Twentieth Century

Mondays: Face the Nation

Tuesdays: Expedition

Thursdays: Person to Person

Fridays: Eyewitness to History

Saturdays: The Nation's Future

Mon.-Fri.: Continental Classroom

NOTE: Times, programs, titles and casts are subject to change. Consult local papers for times and programming details.

The Butlers did it!

They personally visited every south-of-the-border vacation spot you could dream of — and now, with 30 years of experience, they report to you in the most complete travel-tested guidebook series ever published.

BUTLERS' Travel Guides

BUTLERS'

Mexico

BUTLERS'

South America

BUTLERS'

Caribbean

AND CENTRAL AMERICA

by Paul and Erica Butler

All the fun of a summer vacation can be yours in mid-winter in the turnabout Southern Hemisphere or the golden tropics! With the Butlers as your guides, you'll discover a wonderland of holiday fun — of music festivals and folk fiestas, skin diving depths and skiing peaks, luxury resorts and unspoiled wilderness. Whatever your pleasure — from Buenos Aires high life to deep sea fishing — the Butlers will take you on your most memorable vacation ever. All BUTLERS' GUIDES contain full details on travel costs, accommodations, passports, bargains, wining and dining, traditions and taboos, climate and clothes, tipping and tourist services — everything you need to know for smooth sailing in southerly climes. Maps and illustrations. $5.95 each.

At your bookstore

D. VAN NOSTRAND COMPANY, INC.

120 Alexander Street
Princeton, New Jersey

does so "when he thought they were right." Lindsay rarely mentions his party affiliation or his party's candidate for the Presidency. And rather than defend the administration against vanden Heuvel's attacks, he tends to fish up the name of an illiberal Democrat in Congress with whom to tax his opponent. When vanden Heuvel reminds his audiences that Lindsay voted eighty-five percent of the time with the Eisenhower administration and that his rating for "correct" votes with the right-wing Americans for Constitutional Action is the same as that of Senator Everett Dirksen, Lindsay responds that "numbers don't prove anything one way or another." Lindsay has in fact differed with the administration on some key issues and taken strong stands on civil rights, civil liberties, and immigration law. At the same time, as vanden Heuvel points out, Lindsay voted against the depressed-areas bill, against consideration of the Kennedy-Ives bill, against the Forand bill. In short, he charges, Lindsay is a Republican. Lindsay answers by associating vanden Heuvel with the Democratic Party, North and South. Each is running on a party ticket, and trying to establish a degree of independence from it.

This is going on in Manhattan, which some say is not representative of the United States. Or is it?

The New Pollsters

The Gallup Poll must now compete with the U.S.A. Poll for fame and notoriety, but it may be that more attention should be given those polls which do not so much measure public opinion as tamper with it. These are the private opinion surveys that have been commissioned by the candidates to determine which way the voters lean, why they lean, and what poses and issues the candidates should strike to straighten up those who are leaning away from them.

This is "polling in depth," and it has been commanding the talents of more than a dozen private firms at a total cost to the candidates of $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. Louis Harris, who has been conducting surveys for Senator Kennedy, cites ten campaigns that were pitched on poll findings; the first of them was General Eisenhower's race in 1952, when he made a late switch to Korea as a better issue than corruption because private pollsters said it would pay off. One of Harris's reports to Senator Kennedy just before the West Virginia primary advised that the heaviest anti-Catholic sentiment was in the Fifth District and that Senator Kennedy should "present himself as an all-out New Deal Democrat—a fighting liberal."

It is fairly commonly believed in Washington that private polls—notably those by the Claude Robinson Opinion and Research Center—persuaded Nixon to present himself to national television audiences as a firm fellow who reeks of sincerity, and that Kennedy learned from his pollsters that he could lick the youth problem by showing television's millions the mature man who can come up with a three-point answer to absolutely any question.

In any case, Harris is apparently convinced that he and the other Frankensteins must control the machinery they have devised: "For this poll taker's part, he will not undertake to work for any candidate he believes will set back human progress. . . ." But the manipulations of the new pollsters disturb John Day, vice-president of CBS News, who is concerned that they are subverting the democratic process.

No doubt there is a moral issue involved in probing scientifically for the image and the issue that will produce the winning vote, but the most anguished objections come from the old-fashioned pollsters like Gallup and Roper. They have always been handicapped by the Heisenberg uncertainty principle, which holds that some things can never be measured because the act of measuring changes the measurement. This year, the reports of the image-shaping pollsters presumably changed the smiles and the speeches of the candidates from state to state, registering concurrent changes in the minds of the leaners and undecideds and keeping so many of them in a heaven-or-hell undecided state that George Gallup announced in October that if this kept up until November 8, no scientific prediction would be better than a guess.

That's too bad, but technological unemployment for pollsters would probably not be a national disaster.

CAN MANKIND CONTINUE TO LIVE WITH THE BALANCE OF TERROR?

om the searching mind and compassionate heart of a top-ranking Belgian diplomat and research engineer comes a warning and a challenge to all mankind: a warning to face the truth about the dangerous game of nuclear war strategy, where the stakes are the lives of every one of us; a challenge to change the course of events and terminate "The Balance of Terror" before it is too late . . .

EDOUARD LE GHAIT'S NO CARTE BLANCHE TO CAPRICORN

The Folly of Nuclear War Strategy

Edward Le Ghait, former First Secretary of the Belgian Foreign Ministry, former Ambassador to the USSR and China, who numbers among his ancestors a Governor of Wisconsin and a U. S. Secretary of State, has written a book which rings home its message with invariable logic.

re are some of the questions dealt with by Ambassador Le Ghait in NO CARTE BLANCHE TO CAPRICORN.

Is defense possible in a nuclear war? "Public opinion in most countries does not yet realize that in the main of nuclear strategy the only technically obtainable goal in matters of national defense is defense of the deterrent itself. Defense of the nation, of its citizens, of its allies . . . is an impossibility."

Is "limited war" feasible? "From retaliation to retaliation, the caliber of the weapons used would constantly increase and the theater of operations grow continuously . . . total war would soon be reached . . ."

What are the chances of war by accident or miscalculation? ". . . while a 'prudent lack of haste' prevails in the chancelleries and while world leaders compete with one another in the art of procrastination, the fate of mankind teeters on a tightrope. The fact that a nuclear accident or an error in judgment could precipitate total war becomes day by day more probable. Atomic weapons multiply and the means of instantaneous retaliation are improved to the point of absolute reliability."

Does the public have the power to decide its own fate? "We witness a sort of abdication of political power before technology, of the civilian agency before the military . . . [passivity] tends to give carte blanche to certain civilian and military personnel."

116 pp. /Cloth.2.95

Can mankind continue to live with the balance of terror? "When a dangerous situation continues to exist for some time without precipitating accidents, the belief is engendered that the danger has disappeared . . . just because the balance of terror has continued to exist for a few years without causing an accident, people now tend to believe in the stability of the situation and adapt themselves to it."

URGENT: TOP PRIORITY!

Ambassador Le Ghait's treatment of these and many other related questions, together with his important proposals for ending the arms deadlock, is urgent, top priority reading for every American.

PUBLISHED BY

BOOKFIELD HOUSE, INC., 156 FIFTH AVE., N Y 10

Please send me NO CARTE BLANCHE TO CAPRICORN. Enclosed is $2.95 cloth plus 25¢ for mailing charges.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY..... ZONE.....

Money back guarantee. NYC residents please add 3% sales tax.

Intermezzo

AT THE END of the fourth Great Debate, many questions were crowding my mind, and above all one: Why has such punishment been inflicted upon so many of us?

On four different occasions, one hour at a time, over sixty million people have attended those shows called—of all things—debates. It has been the greatest experiment in direct democracy ever attempted in this country. In a town meeting as large as the nation, sixty million sovereign citizens were addressed by the two would-be Presidents, who told them about the issues and the use they should make of their sovereignty when, a few weeks away, each one of them would be secluded for a few moments in the privacy of the voting booth.

On the four occasions my reaction was clouded by the constant concern with the reaction of my neighbors—tens of millions of them. Are they going to see through it all? How many will gulp down that Nixon corn? The traumatic shock of the Checkers speech was still with me, as painful as ever.

In pleading his case, each candidate has used and repeated arguments designed to avoid the risk of overestimating the people's intelligence. Vice-President Nixon over-stretched his confidence in the people's credulity. Actually, in one way at least, the advantage lay with him, for the whole of him is in his TV image. He is entirely what he looks. Yet I must add that just because I am a partisan of Kennedy and know that there is so much more to him, he made me sometimes feel uneasy. Or perhaps it was that I could not forgive him for doing well at Nixon's level.

Maybe the fault was more with the medium and the formula than with the two protagonists. When the medium is used on such large masses, ideas are inevitably flattened and chopped up. This makes for merciless repetition. Repetition is the prerequisite for habit-forming commercials, and neither of the candidates can be blamed too much for having used the same arguments, sometimes in the same words, two, or three, or four times unmercifully.

But it was hard to take. The listener, particularly if cursed with a good memory, got no break. In the last two debates, whenever the subject of Latin-American dictators was raised, one could be sure that Nixon was going to talk about their diminishing number. Then Kennedy would mention the Brazilian presidential candidate who called on Castro and later won the election. And then there was the story of the African students, of ends and means, of the nation's prestige, of Quemoy and Matsu.

The word freedom was piously used hundreds of times. There seemed to be no difference between the freedom for which the Hungarians fought and that of any African territory playing at being a sovereign state. Both candidates were in agreement about wishing to have our American freedom extended to the whole world—neither more nor less. Ghana and Guinea, Guinea and Ghana, kept coming in all the time. But not once was one of our major western allies mentioned. The alliance itself came into the discussion in a passing and not over-original remark by Kennedy, when he said that the political and economic structure of NATO should be strengthened.

WHEN the fourth Great Debate ended, I was too depressed and too tired to turn off the set. Or was I, perhaps, waiting for a commercial to come and cleanse my screen? Blessedly, it came. It was a debate between Bert and Harry, two nice fellows gently quarreling as to how best to sell their beer. That debate, too, I had heard many times. But both Bert and Harry had only the limited ambition of making me conscious of what I suppose is a good beer. Their goal was proportionate to the medium.

The medium, TV, has an extraordinary potency as entertainer and salesman. A party convention or a major rally around a Presidential candidate can be effective vehicles both for entertainment and for party salesmanship. But I do not believe that the confrontation between Presidential candidates lends itself to projection via TV. The very fact of arousing the interest of the millions further lowers the level of campaign oratory that is usually not too high when each candidate performs solo.

With an audience that can be counted in tens of millions, the competition of ideas cannot possibly be real or even conceivable. The protagonists are bound to behave like two talking Univac machines, each conditioned to recite a pre-taped message in answer to a foreseeable challenge from the other.

PERHAPS the major fault lies with the networks' anxiety to prove their civic-mindedness. They can render a much better service to the American people if they give the viewers good programs, good commercials, and make good money.

During those four nightmarish hours one felt at times as if technology, unchecked by adequate foresight, might undermine the representative institutions that keep our country free. But nightmares are just what they are: bad dreams. Those nation-wide town meetings were nothing but electronically contrived bad dreams.

Notes from Backstage

DOUGLASS CATER

COVERING the televised Great Debates on the spot was an eerie experience. We gathered in dim, cavernous halls, barred by armed guards from access to the scene of activity. We watched the show on monitors, silent for the most part, occasionally giving way to wry mirth. At the end of each debate, a pool reporter came out and dictated to us a meticulously detailed account of what he had seen and heard. ("Senator Kennedy took two deep breaths just before the program started. Vice-President Nixon—" "Hey, you're going too fast! What was that again?" "I said Nixon appeared to wet his lips and then at twelve minutes after the hour he wiped his face the first time. He wiped it four times in all.")

When I served on the panel of interrogators in the third debate, I was somewhat baffled by the glimpse of reality I got. It was a strange mixture of planned method and unplanned content. The networks spared no expense or effort to perfect a split-screen arrangement allowing two candidates, who were a whole continent apart on that particular day, to appear to stand side by side. Each of us was given careful explanations of how the production was to be handled. A whole army of technicians worked to remove distortions in presenting the picture to what proved to be an audience of sixty million-odd citizens. Mr. Nixon's studio had been made frigid to eliminate undue perspiration.

Nobody showed much concern with what the program was to be about. The panel consisted of two men from the networks and two journalists chosen by lot. The only qualification was to have accompanied each candidate at some time during the campaign. We prepared ourselves in isolation from one another. Only during the final anxious moments in the make-up room—where we submitted to the same pancake and lip-rouge adornment as Mr. Nixon—did we decide to reveal in confidence to fellow panel members what our opening questions would be. In the words of the announcer, it was unrehearsed.

For me at least, it was a frustrating assignment. Beforehand I had entertained Walter Mitty dreams of posing a question so trenchant and so to the heart of the matter that no candidate could attempt circumlocution. But trenchancy, I found, was not easily come by. The format of the Great Debate was neither fish nor fowl, not permitting the relentless interrogation of the "Meet the Press" type of quiz show or the clash of ideas that can occur in a genuine debate. The candidates had quickly mastered its special form of gamesmanship. No matter how narrow or broad the question, we could watch by the timing device the way each of them extracted his last second of allotted image projection in making his response. The panel's role was hardly more than to designate categories—animal, vegetable, or mineral—on which the two might or might not discourse.

Mr. Moody's Vision

The idea for what many have hailed as a breakthrough in political communication evolved rather haphazardly. Its origin has been traced to a Michigan newspaperman, the late Blair Moody, who in 1952, while serving the unexpired Senate term of Arthur Vandenberg, had a sudden vision of television's enormous potential in the field of political debate. His suggestion for such a debate, in the testimony of one network head, "quickly seized the imagination of the broadcasters." But it failed to get anywhere with the candidates in 1952 and 1956. (Stevenson felt that to challenge Eisenhower would be regarded as a gimmick.) A more basic obstacle to any such encounters by the two major-party candidates lay in Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, which requires equal time for all candidates. This August, Congress temporarily suspended Section 315 for a trial test during the 1960 campaign.

During the legislative deliberations, the overriding concern was how television could be used to bring the campaign more directly to the people. Certain members, including Senator Mike Monroney (D., Oklahoma), thought that Congress should commandeer a number of prime viewing hours from the networks for whatever use the candidates wished to make of them. Network officials resisted, claiming that the First Amendment in effect guarantees them the right to fix such matters as format and scheduling. But they promised generous co-operation with the candidates if left to their own devices. One hour weekly, it was generally thought, could be tried without risk, as one broadcaster put it, of "overexposure, oversaturation, and redundancy."

Only Adlai Stevenson, who by now had acquired enthusiasm for the idea, attempted to paint a more detailed picture of the debates. He favored a ninety-minute program each week in which the candidates could deal, one at a time, with such issues as "disengagement or containment, farm policy, disarmament . . ."

IT WAS probably inevitable that this venture should get caught up in the strategies of networks and candidates alike. NBC Board Chairman Robert W. Sarnoff got the jump on his competitors the night of Nixon's nomination by offering eight hours of prime evening time for what he was first to dub "the Great Debate." Kennedy, as the challenger and the lesser known of the two candidates, promptly accepted without qualm or qualification. Four days later Nixon wired his agreement, stipulating a "full and free exchange of views without prepared texts or notes and without interruption."

In the course of three-power conferences at the Waldorf, there was a great deal of bluff and maneuver. Kennedy's men pressed for at least five debates; Nixon's wanted no more than three. (Fred Scribner, Jr., a Nixon aide, thought two would be plenty.) The Kennedy group, so strapped for funds that they had to cut back on paid TV commitments and anticipating a flurry of electioneering volleys by the Vice-President, tried to get the series stretched out as long as possible. Nixon negotiators were adamant about an October 21 cutoff date. The matter of using notes was not raised again until Nixon accused Kennedy of cribbing in the third debate.

But on one important matter there was agreement. Both sides wanted the debates to be based on questions asked by reporters. A Nixon aide explained to me shortly before the first debate that this would serve to increase viewer interest. He feared that the candidates would be "too polite" if they interrogated each other. A Kennedy aide said very much the same thing: since nobody likes the prosecuting-attorney type on television, it was better to turn this thankless task over to others.

Scissors and Paste

One thing was quite clear: as they approached this brave new frontier of television, the two candidates were far more concerned about their images than their arguments.

Both candidates proved themselves remarkably adaptable to the new art form. They were marvels at extemporization, wasting none of the precious media time in reflective pauses, never having to grasp for the elusive word, able in the peculiar alternation of reply and rebuttal to switch topics smoothly and without a hitch. Each could discuss anything within the allotted two and a half minutes for reply and one and a half for rebuttal.

To anyone who spent much time on tour with the two men, this was no great surprise. The dialogue was largely a paste-up job containing bits and snippets from campaign rhetoric already used many times. As the series wore on, the protagonists were like two weary wrestlers who kept trying to get the same holds. What became clear was how limited the vocabulary of the debate really was and how vague were the candidates' ideas about what to do. Kennedy, we learned over and over, wants to get America moving again. Nixon argues that it is moving, and, in an unfortunate phrase, "We can't stand pat."

Nobody around the candidates seemed to think that clarity of argument was the objective. For the sidelines observer trying to judge this new contest without benefit of rules or score card, it raised more questions than it answered.

KENNEDY's trainers pointed out that he won an important victory simply by closing the maturity gap separating him from a rival four years his elder. He proved himself able to stand up to the man who stood up to Khrushchev. It was an accomplishment, they claimed, that no other means of communication could have effected so well and so quickly.

It may be so. But one kept wondering about those silent millions who sat before their television sets. Did they come any closer to a knowledge of their candidates? Not even a trained political observer could keep up with the crossfire of fact and counterfact, of the rapid references to Rockefeller Reports, Lehman amendments, prestige analyses, G.N.P., and a potpourri of other so-called facts. Or was the knack of merely seeming well informed what counted with the viewer? If so, Mr. Nixon did all right despite an amazing capacity to twist facts to suit his convenience. ("Now, as a result of our taking the strong stand that we did [on Indo-China], the civil war there was ended and today, at least in the south of Indo-China, the Communists have moved out and we do have a strong free bastion there.") Eventually, it seemed as if Kennedy gave up the Herculean effort to sweep up his opponent's fictions.

Who was judged more sincere? What may have been a major test was Nixon's soliloquy on Harry Truman's language and little children. It provoked loud guffaws among the press corps at the studio. But maybe other good Americans were deeply stirred by this pious man who promised, if elected, not to utter strong words in the White House. (He did, however, utter a few in the studio directly after the program, when he accused Kennedy of violating his no-notes proviso; afterward he told reporters that his spontaneous expressions were off the record.)

Last but not least, was the viewer really edified by the frantic clash on foreign policy? Neither of the men showed any regard for the fact that some things are better left unsaid if one of them expects to conduct that foreign policy next January. It was like a bastardized version of Art Linkletter's "People Are Funny" in which the contestant had to tell how he would deal with Castro in 150 seconds flat.

IN CLOSING what he thought was the last of the series, moderator Quincy Howe remarked, "As members of a new political generation, Vice-President Nixon and Senator Kennedy have used new means of communication to pioneer a new type of political debate. . . . Perhaps they have established a new tradition." Howe may or may not be right in his prediction. But before this particular tradition becomes firmly rooted in American politics, it needs the kind of examination it never got before it started. The next time around, one of these pioneers will almost certainly be talking as our President.

RE WHI a signifi out bel and M new tu the two a resul become 1961. F
ment n York a behavie Only shchev Ferhat
al gove public, ministe geria o he had En-lai the elev unist the way panions they w nary to spread welcom no flow Ferhat was obs glued o Novemb

REPORTS ON AFRICA

Uneasy Allies in Algeria

ISAAC DEUTSCHER

WHILE the Soviet premier was busy making speeches in New York, a significant political plot was played out behind his back between Peking and Moscow. This plot has given a new turn to the controversy between the two Communist capitals, and as a result the Algerian war may well become the international crisis of 1961. Repercussions of this development reached Khrushchev in New York and accounted in part for his behavior at the General Assembly.

Only a couple of days after Khrushchev had landed on Manhattan, Ferhat Abbas, head of the provisional government of the Algerian Republic, accompanied by several of his ministers, set out from insurgent Algeria on a journey to Peking, whether he had been invited by Premier Chou En-lai to attend the celebrations of the eleventh anniversary of the Communist victory against Chiang. On the way, Ferhat Abbas and his companions stopped in Moscow. There they were received almost like ordinary tourists. No red carpet was spread out for the Algerians, no welcoming speeches awaited them, no flowers. Even the whereabouts of Ferhat Abbas in the Soviet capital was obscure. Official Moscow, its eyes glued on reports of Khrushchev's doings in New York, ignored the head of a dubious and tiny government and his Chinese pilgrimage. Incidentally, no Soviet bigwig attended the Peking celebrations.

On September 29 Ferhat Abbas and his party landed in Peking. At once a dizzying change occurred around them. Outlaws in their own country and "clandestine travelers" in Moscow, they were welcomed at Peking airport by the Chinese premier and were cheered by large crowds. From the airport, amid the beating of drums and gongs, Ferhat Abbas and Chou En-lai rode in an open car along the flag-draped streets of Peking, where hundreds of thousands of troops, militiamen, and civilians lined up to hail them. There was no end to the waving of Algerian and Chinese flags and to the beating of drums and gongs.

Another visitor in Peking was U Nu, the Burmese prime minister. His visit marked the end of the boundary dispute between his country and China, and he had arrived to sign a boundary treaty. In the absence of any top leaders from the Soviet-bloc countries, U Nu and Ferhat Abbas were to be the two principal guests of honor at the anniversary celebrations. Ferhat Abbas, however, stole the show. At the great anniversary parade on October 1 he stood at Mao Tse-tung's right hand between Mao and Chou to receive the popular acclaim and the salutes of the armed militiamen.

This was not a matter of mere pageantry. From the moment of his arrival Ferhat Abbas found himself at the very center of Peking's political interest. He was closeted for hours with Mao Tse-tung and the other party leaders, and with the deputy chief of staff of the Chinese Army. He was guided all the time by the Gallicized Chou En-lai, who, as a member of the French Communist Party during the years of his exile in France, is more conversant with French-Algerian affairs than anyone else in Peking.

THE CHINESE were obviously attaching extraordinary importance to this visit. Many Algerian delegations had been received in the Chinese capital in the last few years and had departed with advice, supplies, medical equipment, and assurances that they could count on more direct military assistance as well. (Algeria had also received such supplies and medical aid from the Soviet Union and even from Yugoslavia.) But until recently the Algerians had taken only what they wanted even though the Chinese had offered more. Ferhat Abbas was still hoping to obtain his objectives through negotiations with President de Gaulle. But since the failure of the French-Algerian talks at Melun last spring, he had been looking for fresh means toward a more vigorous prosecution of hostilities. Having been more or less cold-shouldered in Moscow, he turned to Peking.

From the moment of his arrival in China, Ferhat Abbas became involved in the controversy between Khrushchev and Mao. The Chinese made no bones about it that they considered Moscow's Algerian policy "disgraceful" and that they were going to put strong pressure on Khrushchev to change it.

The reserve which Khrushchev has until quite recently shown toward the Algerians (and which he has not altogether given up even now) has been dictated by a variety of motives. To side with Ferhat Abbas against de Gaulle was, in Khrush-shchev's eyes, tantamount to driving de Gaulle into Eisenhower's arms; and Khrushchev was more interested in playing de Gaulle against Eisenhower than in using Abbas against de Gaulle. He has also feared that any form of Communist intervention in Algeria would defeat his policy of relaxing tension. When some time ago Peking urged Moscow to grant the Abbas government de facto recognition, Moscow replied rather formalistically that this would be premature because Abbas held no definite territory under administrative control.

A Pawn in Peking

Mao and Chou En-lai decided to use the occasion of Ferhat Abbas's visit for a concerted attack on this Khrushchevite policy and for confronting Khrushchev with certain accomplished facts. On the first day of Abbas's visit, in a speech in his honor, Chou En-lai recalled the "century-old struggle of the Algerian people against French domination" and stated: "The establishment of the provisional government of the Republic of Algeria . . . signifies that this struggle has entered a new phase. We are glad to see that the Algerian National Liberation Army has already freed vast areas in Algeria inhabited by more than half of its population, and has established there its own organs of state power." (This was meant to dispose publicly of the official Soviet argument against the recognition of the Abbas government.) Chou went on: "This tremendous change in Algeria proves once again that a situation in which our enemies are strong while we are weak is only temporary—it is bound to become reversed. Decadent imperialism can be strong only in outward appearance; actually it is weak. Its temporary rampancy is merely a deathbed struggle."

The controversial undertone of Chou's words made it clear that the major issue between Moscow and Peking was the evaluation of the strategic power of the West, which Moscow refused to see as being a mere "paper tiger." According to Chou En-lai, then, the impotence of French arms in Algeria was just another particular illustration for the general Chinese contention that the Communist bloc need not be afraid of the military power of the West and that Khrushchev approached the "paper tiger of NATO" all too timidly and feebly. The burden of Chou's argument was that Algeria constitutes one of the West's weakest spots and that Communism must adjust its tactics to this fact. Moscow was not prepared to accept this view, still less its implications.

Ferhat Abbas, though a mere "bourgeois nationalist," found himself drawn into this inner Communist controversy. Guided by his own interests, he sided with the Chinese against the Russians, i.e., with the extreme left wing of Communism against "the opportunists in Moscow."

Up to the last moment Moscow had advised the Algerians to seek a renewal of negotiations with de Gaulle. "In this era of the great retreat of imperialism," it was said in Moscow, "when so many colonial peoples are obtaining independence, de Gaulle will have to honor his promise of self-determination for Algeria. In any case, the Algerian conflict must not be used to estrange Gaullist France from the Communist bloc and to cement the solidarity of the Atlantic Alliance."

Abbas, acclaimed by his Chinese hosts, now countered this Soviet argument point by point:

"To the Algerian people, suffering and dying each day, the vast controversies on the cold war are of no interest unless they concern the real solidarity of free men . . ." Unless, that is, Moscow sides openly with Algeria.

Aiming at Khrushchev's notion of peaceful coexistence based on the international status quo, Abbas continued: "Similarly, peaceful coexistence is not compatible with territorial partition, with the status quo, with palliatives, and with spheres of influence that would perpetuate any form of colonial servitude." It was a mistake, he went on, to imagine that the war in Algeria was only a French war (as Khrushchev suggested it was). This was NATO's war, for without American equipment and aid the French would have long since been defeated. He who wants to weaken NATO, Abbas pointed out, must strike at it in Algeria; and it was foolish to imagine (as Khrushchev imagined) that one could weaken NATO by appeasing de Gaulle. It was time to stop lulling the "peace-loving" and colonial peoples with tales about the era of the retreat of imperialism, in which colonial peoples can gain independence more or less peacefully, by way of negotiations. The truth is, Abbas asserted, that western imperialism has embarked on a great war of colonial reconquest and is waging it "within the framework of the Atlantic Pact." The Algerians, he concluded, have therefore given up all idea of negotiations. Henceforth they will, on principle, refuse to parley with de Gaulle's government. Instead they will now work for "the internationalization of the Algerian conflict."

ALL THIS fitted in well with the Chinese attitude and with Chinese arguments against Moscow's "opportunism." But what were the ways and means toward the "internationalization" of the Algerian conflict? This question loomed large in Abbas's talks with Mao Tse-tung and the other Chinese leaders. At first Abbas had intended to press the appeal to the U.N. for an all-Algerian referendum conducted under U.N. auspices, and he had apparently received some encouragement from Moscow. This idea did not, however, commend itself to his Chinese hosts, who held that in taking this initiative Abbas might be preparing the undoing of his own government. Had he learned nothing, they asked, from Lumumba's fate? Had not Lumumba been destroyed by the same United Nations force that he had summoned to the Congo?

Ferhat Abbas became hesitant, and the discussion proceeded to alternative methods of "internationalization." The Chinese had been ready for some time to send volunteers to Algeria, with an eye to the eventual formation of an International Brigade similar to that which fought in Spain in 1936-1938. However, Khrushchev and the Soviet Presidium had vetoed this project; and unless they changed their minds, the project could not be taken up again. The main thing, then, for the Chinese was to try and force Khrushchev's hand. But how? It was agreed in Peking that in any case Ferhat Abbas should war," a to app direct gerian a Pan-A agreed Ferhat and op with his Report reached during meeting

Lecture

On Oct in Mosc in Pekin Chinese darity h which h and wit Soviet
he expla
"the in struggle

In M from th embassy in his h in Khr most au Kozlov, consider enough member Kosygin present. that se Moscow ium a morality had da for dec
In M claimed Kosygin
greatnes Union
you. Un changing own cou Soviet U those w
dom. Yo people becomin to say, rest is o it is ho
From A ing may

"I wo claimed Kosygin
greatnes Union
you. Un changing own cou Soviet U
those w
dom. Yo people becomin
to say, rest is o
it is ho
From A ing may

should seek to "spread the Algerian war," and that he should continue to appeal to all Arab countries for direct military assistance—the Algerian struggle must be proclaimed a Pan-Arab holy war. It was further agreed that on his return journey Ferhat Abbas should stop in Moscow and openly confront the Russians with his demands.

Reports about these developments reached Khrushchev in Manhattan during the intervals between the meetings of the General Assembly.

Lecture in Moscow

On October 6 Ferhat Abbas was back in Moscow. In the course of his week in Peking he had learned to "speak Chinese." "The hour of active solidarity has struck" was the cry with which he left the Chinese capital and with which he arrived at the Soviet capital. "Active solidarity," he explained, meant "total aid" for "the intensification of the armed struggle in Algeria."

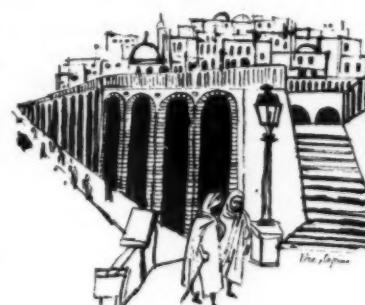

In Moscow, Abbas went straight from the airport to the Tunisian embassy, where a reception was given in his honor. Of the three men who in Khrushchev's absence have the most authority in Moscow, Mikoyan, Kozlov, and Suslov, none apparently considered the reception important enough to attend; but two other members of the Presidium, A. N. Kosygin and D. S. Polyansky, were present. Ferhat Abbas made a speech that set political and diplomatic Moscow agog. He read the Presidium a sermon on revolutionary morality, the like of which no one had dared to preach in Moscow for decades.

"I would like to tell you," he exclaimed passionately, turning to Kosygin and Polyansky, "that the greatness and power of the Soviet Union imposes special duties on you. Until recently you were busy changing social conditions in your own country. Now it is time for the Soviet Union to turn its eyes toward those who suffer and die for freedom. You must not let the Algerian people down. . . . The world is becoming one. No people can afford to say, 'We are enjoying peace; the rest is of no concern to us.' In Algeria it is hot war that is being waged." From Algeria, he went on, the fighting may spread to the whole Mediterranean, and it may yet disrupt the peace of the world. The Russians must not imagine that they would be able to insulate themselves and go on "building socialism" all for themselves. "I am asking the leaders of the Soviet Union to ponder deeply the Algerian problem and the fate of all colonial peoples and to help us effectively."

The two members of the Soviet Presidium sat as if dumfounded, not knowing whether to join in the applause with which Moscow's Arab colony greeted Abbas's fervent plea.

In Manhattan, Khrushchev felt that he was being outflanked by Mao and Chou, and he did his best to regain the initiative. He was already aware that a shift in his own Algerian policy was overdue: just before his departure for New York

he had ordered a thorough overhaul of the African department of the Soviet ministry of foreign affairs. Vague talk about the need to "internationalize" the Algerian conflict had also been going on for some time. In New York, however, Belkacem Krim, Abbas's envoy, newly arrived from Peking and Moscow, made it clear to Khrushchev that things had gone much further in Peking than he had feared, and that Mao was giving ideological battle over the Algerian issue.

Khrushchev decided to forestall and counter Mao's moves. He announced (without, it seems, consulting the Presidium in Moscow) that the Soviet Union was recognizing the provisional government of Algeria, a step he had hitherto refused to take despite strong promptings from Peking. However, the recognition was vague in form; and when the announcement reached Moscow, the Soviet foreign ministry, which was obviously taken by surprise, put the most noncommittal interpretation on the act, saying that it did not amount to normal de facto recognition but only to permission for an Algerian diplomatic agency to be installed in Moscow. Khrushchev's next step was to adopt the slogan about "the internationalization of the Algerian conflict," but also to take some of the sting out of the slogan. While yielding on some points to pressure from Peking, Khrushchev informed Peking that he would yield no further, that the Algerians must leave the door ajar for negotiations with de Gaulle, and that this must be reflected in the joint Chinese-Algerian communiqué. At the same time Khrushchev promised Belkacem Krim to step up Soviet aid for the Algerians but left no doubt that Moscow would uphold its veto on the sending of volunteers to Algeria from the countries of the Soviet bloc.

Whether Moscow also objects to Abbas's plan to "spread the war" by pressing his appeal to all Arab states is less clear. Khrushchev may well reckon that neither Nasser nor Bourguiba would wish to respond to such an appeal, and that this lack of support from Moslem nationalists may free him from the need to take embarrassing decisions. But he can have no certainty about this. In any case, the cry for the spreading of the Algerian war, raised with new ardor from Peking, accounted for much of the feverish nervousness with which Khrushchev consulted the Algerians and the other North Africans in New York, all too evidently doing his best to please them and less evidently striving to prevent Communist policy in North Africa from getting out of Soviet control.

After Moscow

Which one will set the pace—Mao or Khrushchev? This is the question, and Khrushchev's performance in New York may well have a bearing on the answer.

The fact that the call for a U.N.-sponsored referendum in Algeria has so far evoked little response in the Assembly must add to Khrushchev's difficulties in withstanding pressure for more radical forms of pro-Algerian action. Also, since he has failed to achieve any of his proposed changes in the organization of the United Nations, he will find it hard to argue against the Chinese, who have always viewed it as a "mere tool of American imperialism," that the Algerian conflict should be put under U.N. jurisdiction. The distinct possibility of the spread of the Algerian war must have been at the back of Khrushchev's mind during the latter part of his stay in New York, when he so often startled the Assembly by references to the danger of war, references that to his audience sounded gratuitous and overdramatic.

Until Khrushchev's departure from New York, official Moscow remained confused and bewildered about the "new line" on Algeria. In vain did Abbas try to pin down the Russians about further aid and the mode of diplomatic recognition. All that Moscow's officialdom knew was that they could no longer treat the Algerian with the condescension they had shown him before the latest turn of events. When Abbas was taking his leave of Moscow, on October 10, the red carpet was unrolled at last, but rather sparingly and grudgingly. Kosygin, who attended the farewell ceremony on behalf of the government, assured the Algerians of Soviet sympathy for their "heroic struggle," but he did not go beyond such laconic generalities. It was left to Abbas, in his farewell address, to interpret expansively the meaning of Khrushchev's statement on recognition, to remind the Russians of promises of aid, to restate that the Algerians were fighting against NATO and not just against the French, and to proclaim once again that "peaceful coexistence is unthinkable without the final liquidation of all colonial rule." The Russians did not adopt these formulas officially. But Abbas left Moscow in the knowledge that henceforth he could appeal against Soviet half-heartedness to Chinese militancy.

ALGERIA is clearly going to claim a much of Khrushchev's attention in coming weeks and months. It is already the focus of the controversy between Moscow and Peking; and in 1961 it may become the focus of an international crisis far more inflammatory than the Congo has been in 1960.

Kenya Braces for Freedom

GORDON SHEPHERD

NAIROBI

EVEN in the relatively stable colony of Kenya, the formula of nearly all mob oratory these days is direct and inflammatory. The Europeans have the land; the Indians have the shops; the Africans want both. And with Kenya's first broadly franchised elections just around the corner, party leaders are promising them both.

This new torrent of native Kenyan agitation started off last February as an apparently well-regulated stream fed from the decorous diplomatic springs of London's Lancaster House, where a five-week conference on the colony's future was held under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. Iain Macleod, the British colonial secretary. The conference was attended

"reserved" minority members—ten European, eight Asian, and two Arab. These fifty-three will then sit as an electoral college and select another twelve "national members" to bring the total up to the prescribed sixty-five.

But though the Africans are thus assured of political preponderance next February, they are not yet assured of sovereignty. What the Lancaster House conference laid down in substance was that the new black parliamentary predominance and the old white colonial rule should run side by side for an unspecified transition period. The British governor not only retains a safe majority in the twelve-man executive council or cabinet; he also keeps full emergency powers, including the veto weapon and the right to swamp even the new African parliament with supplementary nominees of his own.

by all European, Asian, and Arab spokesmen of note in Kenya and by every single African member of the present Kenyan legislative council. Everyone entitled to speak for Kenya's past, present, and future was around the green-baize table, with the exception of Jomo Kenyatta himself.

After seventeen plenary meetings and countless private hotel-room sessions, a workable common denominator of agreement, known as the Macleod constitution, was published on February 16. This provided for a new Kenyan legislative council or parliament in which the Africans are certain of their first majority.

Fifty-three of the sixty-five seats in the new chamber will be elected on a common roll. Thirty-three of these fifty-three seats, the so-called "open" ones, will fall more or less automatically to African candidates, while the weight of the African vote on the common roll will also largely decide the choice of the twenty

THIS scheme, to all appearances unworkable, has been devised to meet a patently illogical situation. Kenya's six million Africans are not thought ready to take over full power and privilege from the sixty thousand white settlers so soon; yet world opinion and their own surging nationalism demand that the motions of a transfer should begin. So the reins will be put into their hands but for the moment their hands will be tied.

T. J. Mboya and Ronald Ngala represent two opposing wings of the African nationalistic movement. But they both told me recently that just before leaving London, they delivered a unanimous "private memorandum" to Mr. Macleod setting out their conviction that the new constitution would be out of date before it was implemented. British sources in Nairobi confirmed the existence of such a memorandum. But they claimed that having supported the conference findings in public, Mboya and his colleagues are committed to giving the 1961 constitution a fair trial.

This antithesis soon sparked off a quarrel between Mboya and the faith.

Colonial
ed as will be February plana record

The rick and "short would gency ition and v threat

In rick s to be Kenya sovere includ tary i be ab race s public establi expere of loc outsid

K.A.N Kenya
gards a ma gram Four prints power reality and M Michael multipl Sir F who h
the N

The know portan trade-the K or K. of the

To foe a house a wes qualit in Afri tive la ition w Ruski never

Novem

Colonial Office on the issue of "bad faith." Mboya has been widely quoted as saying that "The Union Jack will be hauled down in Kenya next February." When pressed for an explanation he would only amend the record to read "next year."

The governor of Kenya, Sir Patrick Renison, has warned Mboya and anybody else against trying "short cuts" and pointed out that he would not hesitate to use his emergency powers if "the peaceful evolution of the people of Kenya to speedy and worthwhile independence were threatened."

In the same recent speech, Sir Patrick stated what Britain considered to be the basic requirements of Kenya's development before full sovereignty could be granted. These included "representative parliamentary institutions," which should not be abused, an acceptance that every race should play its part in Kenya's public and economic life, and the establishment of a "competent and experienced civil service composed of local people and reinforced from outside as long as is necessary."

K.A.N.U.'s Enfant Terrible

Kenyan party politics, at least as regards next year's elections, is purely a matter of personalities: the program is the person, and vice versa. Four leaders hold the various blueprints for the colony's future and the power to turn those blueprints into reality. Two are African: Mr. Mboya and Mr. Ngala; and two are British: Michael Blundell, leader of the multiracial New Kenya Group, and Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck, who has just emerged at the head of the New Kenya Coalition.

The youngest, most colorful, best known, and potentially the most important of the four is Mboya, Kenya's trade-union boss, secretary-general of the Kenya-African National Union, or K.A.N.U., and the enfant terrible of the colony's politics.

Tom, as he is known to friend and foe alike, is an ebony dynamo, housed somewhat incongruously in a western lounge suit. He exudes a quality of sheer energy that is rare in Africa. The son of a primitive native laborer, his only higher education was a two-year scholarship at Ruskin College, Oxford, which he never completed. Yet his arguments are easily produced in flawless English. What is more, he is one of the few African or Asian politicians I have ever met who reason deductively, at least in private conversation when the political war paint is off. He does not begin with slogans and hang the facts haphazardly around them. He starts with the facts, and develops them in such a convincing way that the slogans at the end sound like logical conclusions.

My interview with Mboya took place in his Nairobi trade-union headquarters. The courtyard was packed with excited students assembled for a farewell address by Mboya. It took more than an hour to get him upstairs to the relative peace of his office. Even then the door was constantly flung open by people demanding his advice.

WE TALKED FIRST of Mboya's pet project, the "crash program" to equip Kenya with the maximum local administrative and technical talent in the minimum time. He said: "Our aim is to replace white officials by Africans at a set percentage figure every year from now on. In my opinion Kenya can achieve one hundred per cent localization in between three and five years, with perhaps an extra year allowed for very specialist appointments. Our students in America, Britain, and India, plus Africans already employed in lower posts here, are the nucleus for this operation. But let me stress that independence can and must be given to Kenya before this localization is completed."

I asked him to comment on the "hasten slowly" warning just addressed to him by Sir Patrick Renison. He obliged with alacrity: "Our future is in our own hands. Once we have an elected majority in the parliament next March, the British will have to listen to us. K.A.N.U. regards those elections as a referendum over immediate independence, and we shall act accordingly once given that mandate from the people.

It is no good talking about transitional stages and self-government. We are beyond that and so is every part of Africa."

When I pointed to the Congo as an example of what hasty nationalization could produce, Mboya conceded the point with a shrug. He admitted his "concern" over the present situation there and had words of praise for Mr. Hammarskjöld. "We consider that the U.N. has done its best and that all Africans should appreciate this," he added.

There is no question of Mboya's ability as a speaker and organizer. He does, however, sometimes run afoul of colleagues in his own party, and one explanation behind his public tantrums may well be the struggle for power against older K.A.N.U. leaders like James Gichuru (who has the added advantage of coming from Kenya's "tribe of state," the Kikuyu).

If Mboya is prepared to give both himself and the raw continent around him a little time to mature, a great African leader may emerge. But if he is led by his own showmanship and love of the limelight to try and run before either he or Kenya can crawl, the African continent will simply have one more irresponsible demagogue. K.A.N.U. politics already has something of dictatorship about it: excessive centralization, intolerance of opposition, and a readiness to destroy the tribe before the nation is ready to replace it. If Mboya can hold the long-term leadership of K.A.N.U. (which is probable but by no means certain) these things could all push him to despotism. But in that case, he would become a Kenyan Nkrumah rather than a Lumumba—he is too shrewd and calculating an operator to follow Lumumba's crazy path.

Mboya's Competition

A day or two later I called on Ronald Ngala, who leads the rival and more moderate African nationalist party, the Kenya African Democratic Union, or K.A.D.U. His is a different world from the boisterous clamor of Mboya's trade-union H.Q. Ngala accepted office earlier this year as Kenyan minister of labor under the British Crown (a thing Mboya would never dream of doing), and our talk took place in his sedate ministerial office with a smiling portrait of Queen Elizabeth II gazing down from the wall.

His views matched the setting. Puffing away at an English briar pipe, he immediately stressed that the big difference between K.A.D.U. and K.A.N.U. was that "D" in his party's name. "We are solid in our belief in western democracy and in the values of individual liberty," he said. "One wing of K.A.N.U. is already flirting with Moscow and Peking. Furthermore, unlike K.A.N.U., we believe in giving all the tribes and regions of Kenya a chance to express themselves. The people must have something to choose from when they are ready and not be forced into one mold."

On two basic campaigning points, however, Ngala must go along with the K.A.N.U. program. The first is to hail the detained Kenyatta as Kenya's first prime minister or president-to-be. This is coupled with demands for Kenyatta's release, which are not as sincere as they sound. Mboya fears for his leadership in K.A.N.U., and Ngala, the spokesman of the smaller tribes, fears the re-emergence of the great Kikuyu hero.

The second common electioneering plank is insistence on early independence. Ngala set himself apart from Mboya by stressing that the Macleod constitution must be given a fair trial, as agreed in London. But he too seized on the magic formula of majority representation as being an almost immediate passport to sovereignty.

It is generally agreed that K.A.D.U., partly because of its moderation, is unlikely to win more than a third of the African seats next February. But despite his smaller following, Ngala is a handbrake on Mboya's "hot rod" political machine. Unhappily for the colony, Ngala himself is not cut out to be a compelling national figure. In temperament and appearance he is more the bureaucrat than the politician.

The Settlers' Program

To some extent, this same problem of divided talents and enthusiasms also afflicts British settler politics, which is the core of all the minority movements, European or Asian. At one extreme there has been the right-wing faction led by Group Captain Llewellyn R. Briggs, which has stood for maximum delay in handing over power to the blacks, coupled with a minimum loss in privilege, profits, and comforts for the whites. The Lancaster House constitution, with its broad franchise provisions, tolled Briggs's death knell as an electoral force, and now he and his die-hards have completed their political surrender.

This took the form of a tacit merger with a new party led by a seventy-year-old veteran settler and pillar of Kenya society, Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck. Sir Ferdinand resigned as speaker of the Kenya Legislative Council last March in protest against the "precipitate London agreement." Despite his reluctance ("I'm too old for this game"), this catapulted him into politics. "C.-B." has become the focal point for what might be called the moderate but determined settlers' opinion. By now, at least three-quarters of the European community seems to be behind him.

ON THE DAY he decided to found his new party (despite frantic opposition from the Colonial Office in London), I talked to him in his sprawling bungalow in the Nairobi woods. It was hard to believe one was not sitting in some squire's home in far-away Devon.

He outlined his program as follows: "What the Coalition aims at is uniting the Europeans and thus securing fair treatment for individuals of all communities, which is also the best way of sustaining the country's economy. I know Macleod has been against this because he fears the Africans will regard it as a white "ganging up" and react accordingly. But once we have made it quite clear that we are neither opposing nor delaying the transfer of power, I am sure any African leader will understand our acting together. The fact is, politics here is still racial and is getting more so every month, thanks largely to the activities of the extremist Africans themselves."

There can be no doubt that C.-B.'s new party has struck a severe blow at the chances of Michael Blundell and his multiracial New Kenya Group. I drove out to see Blundell the next day at Nakuru, about a hundred miles upcountry. I found a fifty-year-old Yorkshireman passionately dedicated to the proposition that if the white man is to survive in Kenya or in Africa, he must merge, socially and politically, with the natives and accept native leadership. "We must all become Kenyans," he said, "not Africans, Asians, or Europeans."

The Europeans of Kenya, however, are ordinary middle-class farmers, not evangelists; they recoil with distaste from putting their foot on the lowest rung of Blundell's multiracial ladder by sending their children to mixed schools. The higher rungs of Blundellism, which presumably include intermarriage, are lost in a vicious Cloud-Cuckoo-Land as far as the average settler is concerned.

Nor, and this is far more to the point, is the African any keener to clamber up the all-Kenyan ladder. Multiracialism can only blur the edges of his nationalism, and, ironically, what he fears in it is the one thing farthest from Blundell's idealistic mind—a cynical device to project white dominance into pseudo partnership. Among the masses, Blundell's appeal has echoed back emptily.

Tribal Patchwork

When Kenya's first African-dominated parliament meets next February, all these policies and programs, both black and white, will have to be judged against two hard realities. The first is economic. In the immediate future the colony will still depend on its settler communities for prosperity. Nearly all of its present commercial, technical, administrative, and professional skills are either European or Asian, and the Congo has shown what happens when these foreign skills are suddenly withdrawn. Moreover, Kenya has no rich Katanga Province to exploit. Forty per cent of the colony's gross national product comes from agriculture, and nearly eighty per cent of this contribution is made by European farmers. One of several reasons why the white man is unlikely to scuttle out of Kenya as he scuttled out of the Congo is that he cannot take his land with him; nor, at the moment, are there any guarantees of fair compensation to tempt him to go without it. can de will be whether family pattern fitted. The ical. ancien machine mind. Africa into the impati not be politi fears a uneasy between Niloti come to

A in opening campaign Republic the two ment of which, teacher China. dent S. visit to free lo million treatise der wh to ex frans' each y Chine Algeria in the merely its welling hu its dea and in altogether lished and ex for mis scale a people out it. The most the Colonial Office can do is secure such guarantees. It will be for the Africans to decide whether the settler, foreign but familiar, is better excluded from the pattern of Kenyan independence or fitted into it.

The second reality is socio-political. For some years to come, the ancient tribe and not the new party machine will dominate the native mind. In Kenya, as throughout Africa, the primeval past runs right into the present; for all of Mboya's impatient enthusiasm, it simply cannot be shed overnight. Nationalist politics is already riddled with tribal fears and rivalries: K.A.N.U. is an uneasy and suspicious partnership between the Bantu Kikuyu and the Nilotic Luo. K.A.D.U. strives to become the mouthpiece of the Kipsigi, Suk, Nandi, Tugen, and other smaller tribes who fear a black Kikuyu-Luo dictatorship as the successor to impartial white rule.

Nor is this all. Among the first headaches of free Kenya will be secessionist tendencies, which again are based on the country's tribal patchwork. The 60,000 Masai in the west will veer to their blood brothers in Tanganyika. The 55,000 Somali in the north will lean toward the new state of Somalia just across the border. If another Congo is to be avoided in Kenya, a transfer must be devised that will assure the co-operation of the settlers and the rights of all those tribes who were there before them. Any African nationalism that flouted these conditions would lead the country into bankruptcy, civil war, or both. »» implements, and medicines, all well calculated to reflect China's growing industrial strength. In return, China will receive coffee, industrial diamonds, rubber, and other raw materials.

The $25-million loan is not only non-interest-bearing, it is also "without any conditions or privileges attached." Guinea will have the use of the full amount for ten years and thereafter will repay the loan, either in goods or in the currency of a third country agreed upon with China, in ten annual installments. China will send experts, technicians, and skilled workers to Guinea, provide complete equipment, machinery, and materials, and assist in the training of Guinean technicians and skilled workers. All traveling expenses, going and coming, of the Chinese experts will be met by China. Their living expenses will come out of the loan, but "Their standard of living shall not exceed that of personnel of the same rank in the Republic of Guinea."

In case this sort of innuendo goes over anyone's head, the joint communiqué becomes a good deal more explicit. "At present, all threats to and obstacles to world peace come from the side of imperialism," according to Guinea's President Sékou Touré and Liu Shao-chi, chairman of the Chinese People's Republic. "Therefore . . . the two parties solemnly declare their resolute support for the just struggle for national liberation of the peoples of Algeria, the Congo, South Africa, and other countries. They condemn the schemes of imperialism as interfering in the Congo's internal affairs and encroaching on its territorial integrity"

At the state banquet in Peking to celebrate the new accord, Liu Shao-chi left no doubt as to the identity of the "imperialists." He accused the United States of supporting both the French in Algeria and the "colonialist authorities of the Union of South Africa in their barbarous policy of racial discrimination." Under the flag of the United Nations, the United States was also "invading the Congo on a large scale, committing intervention and creating division there in an attempt to realize its scheme of swallowing up the Congo." Should it succeed, he add-

Chinese Bearing Gifts

DENIS WARNER

A GIFT of ten thousand tons of rice in May of this year marked the opening of Communist China's campaign to win the friendship of the Republic of Guinea. A month later the two countries signed an agreement on cultural co-operation, under which, among other things, Guinean teachers and students will study in China. Finally, in September, President Sékou Touré made a five-day visit to Peking to collect an interest-free loan of 100 million rubles ($25 million) and to put his signature to treaties of friendship and trade under which the two countries expect to exchange 1.2 billion Guinean francs' ($4.92 million) worth of goods each year.

China's financial support for the Algerian rebels and its activities in the Congo may be dismissed as merely providing further evidence of its well-established policy of exploiting human misery to its own ends; its deal with Guinea, both in nature and implication, is another matter altogether. The beachhead established in May has been consolidated and expanded and the way opened for missionary work on a much wider scale among the 220 million African people, who, having existed for years under the "yoke of imperialism," are regarded by Peking as a splendid recruiting ground for the Communist cause. For this reason, the agreements on economic and technical co-operation and on trade and payments, the treaty of friendship, the joint communiqué issued at the conclusion of President Touré's Peking visit, and the various speeches made by the Chinese leaders and Touré merit careful—and urgent—attention by the West.

A Certain Unsubtlety

The nature and the terms of the loan, the agreement on the provision of technicians and other specialists, and the conditions under which they will live in Guinea are all carefully designed to underscore the advantages that flow from association with altruistic, humanitarian China by way of contrast with the implicit evils and designs of American aid.

Heading the list of commodities that China will export is rice, a staple item in Guinea's diet. An even more interesting item, "educational and cultural supplies," is tucked away among textiles, building materials, agricultural machinery and ed, it would "unfold its schemes against the other independent African countries."

Sékou Touré, in turn, demanded that "ideological, economic, and cultural imperialism be brought to an end." He expressed his "warmest thanks" for all the contributions the Chinese had already made to the struggle of the African people. And he reassured his listeners that "Even though many slanders have been directed against your people, whom the imperialists wish to isolate from African political consciousness, we can assure you that the Africans know where the truth lies. . . . They know also the lesson they can draw from your history—to unite more effectively in the anti-imperialist struggle."

Under the circumstances, the note of jubilation in the Peking People's Daily editorial of September 14 summing up the results of the Sékou Touré visit and the signing of the first treaty of friendship with an African state was understandable: "It is a momentous event not only in the history of Chinese-Guinean relations but also in the history of relations between China and Africa."

THIS is a conclusion one may well share. At the same time, it is, or it ought to be, a final warning signal of what China is up to in Africa today. The establishment of the Chinese-African People's Friendship Association on April 12, the Second Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Conference in the Guinean capital of Conakry from April 11 to April 15, and a mass rally in Peking on April 17 set in train a full-scale effort by Communist China to consolidate its position with the older African states and to pick up diplomatic support from the new. "Facts prove that U.S. imperialism is today not only the Asian peoples' worst enemy but also the most dangerous enemy of the African peoples," said Kuo Mo-jo, chairman of the China Peace Committee, who delivered the keynote speech at the April rally.

Before, during, and after the conference, delegations from Algeria, Morocco, Ghana, Congo, Kenya, the Ivory Coast, Mali, Zanzibar, Somalia, Gabon, Uganda, Sierra Leone, Cameroon, and Togo flowed into China for the Red-carpet treatment.

In June there were no less than five separate delegations from the Congo in the country. Some delegates were dazzled by what they saw. Others expressed the opinion that China's revolution had awakened Africa.

NOT ALL were awakened in the way the Communists hoped, however. Despite Peking's blandishments, Togo, Cameroon, Somalia, and the Malagasy Republic have either exchanged diplomatic missions with Nationalist China or have announced their intention of doing so. Moreover, the Ivory Coast, Upper Volta, Niger, Dahomey, the Union of Central African Republics, and Gabon are all regarded as unlikely to recognize Peking. Liberia and Libya both favor Taipei.

To make sure that its message is being heard loud and clear, however, Peking Radio has increased its broadcasts beamed to Africa and has given a wide coverage to African affairs, with heavy emphasis on China's role as a true friend of the African independence movement,

"resolutely opposed to imperialism, colonialism, and neo-colonialism," its pejoratives for American aid.

It is not a situation that should occasion any complacency. That numerous new states have not responded to Peking's trumpet call does not necessarily imply that they have made up their minds irrevocably and forever. In some cases, members of the French Community, with rulers sympathetic to France, have accepted the lead given by Paris in foreign affairs—about which they know little and which, in any event, is not the most pressing of their concerns. But it seems improbable that they will all remain steadfast when they become accustomed to the reins and strains of office and subject to nationalistic pressures to think for themselves. For the fact that they have shown no great eagerness to accept Peking's embrace will only spur the Chinese Communists to greater efforts. As part of China's plan to woo and win the underdeveloped world, the Guinea deal was cheap at the price.

The Strong Man of Guinea

LLOYD M. GARRISON

No COUNTRY is more misunderstood than Guinea," said President Sékou Touré. "There are three images of Guinea—the West's, the East's, and our own. But for us, East and West doesn't exist. Ours is a world of haves and have-nots. Our friends are determined solely on the basis of whether they support our aspirations."

Touré's meaning was clear: the Communist East understood Guinea; the West, and America in particular, did not. Evidence of Soviet-bloc "understanding" is apparent everywhere in Conakry, the capital city. Civil servants ride about in four hundred Soviet jeeps, the official vehicles for all government use. Western consumer goods are disappearing from the shelves, and competing for their place are Polish cigarettes, East German flour, Czech Pilsener beer, and Soviet soap, sugar, and matches—which fail to light in Conakry's damp climate. Even wine, long a French monopoly, is now being imported from Czechoslovakia.

In Guinea's independence year, 1958, eighty per cent of its trade was with France. Now Guinea has cut free from the franc zone, and the bulk of its trade is with the East. Long-term barter agreements with the Soviet-bloc countries have tied up most of Guinea's exports: coffee, bananas, palm oil, and citrus fruits. Thanks to a $35-million Soviet low-interest loan, Guinea is investing in a new National Assembly Building, a polytechnic institute, a 25,000-seat stadium, a printing plant, a powerful short-wave transmitter, and a jet-length runway at Conakry's airport. More than two hundred Communist technical advisers are now supervising the construction of these showcase projects.

Two years ago, there were seven thousand Frenchmen in Guinea. Today, fewer than two thousand remain. When Guinea overwhelmingly rejecte within voted Gauille were ment and f educa Paris. to ma the o

To da to tak
The depart gratef munis and thought still s an eve ing (o Warsa contra only c demic
The
the ec Guine print brain also agency impot the sa intern were of the Natio countr manag
One o ambit
"Deco interes doubt downt town, busine owner

Tou hi compl Soviet the So pandi buildi projec which Dam i sian

Novem

rejected the French offer to remain within the French Community and voted for independence instead, de Gaulle retaliated. French personnel were abruptly withdrawn, government offices were stripped of desks and filing cabinets, and even the educational records were taken to Paris. French policy was calculated to make Guinea an "example" for the other French colonies in Africa. To date, all the others have seen fit to take their independence within the French Community.

To fill the vacuum created by the departure of the French, Touré gratefully accepted offers of Communist teachers, doctors, midwives, and communications experts. Although several hundred students are still sent to universities in France, an even greater number are studying (on full scholarships) in Prague, Warsaw, Moscow, and Peking. In contrast, the United States took only eight students in the last academic year, and Great Britain five.

The Touré government's grip on the economy is a tight one. When Guinea quit the franc zone and printed its own francs, Touré's brain trust, the Bureau Politique, also launched a huge state-run agency to determine the flow of all import-export trade and to govern the sale and distribution of goods internally. In August, foreign banks were ordered to deposit fifty per cent of their accounts in the government National Bank or get out of the country. Of five firms, one has managed to stay under these terms. One of the main slogans of Touré's ambitious new Three-Year Plan is "Decolonize the Economy" of French interests, and this intention will undoubtedly succeed. Already, parts of downtown Conakry resemble a ghost town, with more and more French businesses shuttering down and the owners flying home.

TOURE, a powerfully built man in his late thirties, has recently completed a whirlwind tour of the Soviet Union and China. In Moscow, the Soviets pledged their aid in expanding Guinea's railway system and building a giant hydroelectric power project on the Konkouré River, which is to Guinea what the Aswan Dam is to Egypt. (Already fifty Russian technicians have arrived in Guinea to start work on the railroads.) In Peking more than a hundred thousand Chinese were mustered to hear Touré speak at a spectacular open-air rally staged in his honor, and the official People's Daily devoted six of its eight pages to his arrival. This was wider coverage than Nikita Khrushchev got on his visit to China last year. At the climax of his tour, Touré signed a trade pact in which China agreed to help finance Guinea's three-year plan with a $25-million loan, interest-free—a bargain not even the Russians have been able to match.

Hurrying back to Conakry for a brief report on his trip, Touré then took off again for New York to address the General Assembly. Echoing one of Khrushchev's major themes, he solidly backed the Soviet's latest anti-colonial line: with most African states now independent or well on the road to it, Touré warned Africans that they face a more subtle but equally sinister threat of being "asphyxiated economically" by the ex-colonial masters. In short western business enterprise must be uprooted and cast out. "As long as Africa remains an economic appendage of the metropolitan powers," Touré said, "true emancipation will never be won."

To many observers, Touré's speech, which lasted more than two hours, seemed to repeat most of Khrushchev's major policy positions. Some delegates were surprised, however, when Touré spoke again the morning after Khrushchev's shoe-pounding exhibition. Reproaching the Communists for "cluttering up" the colonialism issue with propaganda, he called instead for "an atmosphere of understanding and collaboration." This, said Touré, is better than "trying to feed the fires of discontent and disturbance." That evening Khrushchev flew back to Moscow without comment, and over the weekend Touré slipped quietly down to Havana—the only head of state attending the General Assembly to accept Castro's invitation to visit Cuba. On the eve of his departure for the trip home to Guinea, Touré and Castro agreed to cultural exchanges and signed a trade pact.

Cars Come Later

The fact that Communist aid has embraced almost the entire Guinean economy does not disturb Touré. I have heard him vehemently deny that such aid necessarily contains "strings." Western suggestions that Guinea "has gone Communist" or at best become a Soviet satellite nettle him. "You know what I do for relaxation?" he has said. "I gather all the latest clippings from the western press, and the things they say about us make me laugh." But there was more frustration than humor in his voice.

From Guinea's viewpoint, the United States has failed to qualify as an "understanding" friend because it arrived with too little aid, too late. Out of deference to France, the State Department withheld recognition of Guinea's independence until more than fifty other nations had granted it. Moreover, when Guinea turned first to the United States with a request for help immediately after the French evacuation, the fact that the State Department did not even reply to their note was taken as a deliberate insult.

The Soviets have no colonial history in Africa, and Communist aggressions in Korea, Hungary, or Tibet are either ignored by Guineans or tossed off as complications of the cold war "which have nothing to do with us." Long before independence, many Guinean students in France were feted by French Communists; some were given free excursions to Moscow. Many of the present cabinet ministers received their political initiation in the Confédération Générale du Travail (CGT), France's Marxist-dominated trade-union movement.

Touré, who speaks French with force and eloquence, is among those who served a political apprenticeship in the CGT. While neither he nor more than a handful of his compatriots became Communists, they have acquired what one American diplomat described as a "built-in affinity for the East." Guineans are impressed with Russia's development from a backward economy to Sputniks in forty years. While many express wonderment at America's opulence, it is hardly surprising that a people who are ninety-two per cent illiterate find it difficult to identify our wealth as a goal within their immediate reach. As one Guinean just back from the United States told me, "It took America three hundred years to reach its peak. What we need now are the basic things: more food, more hospitals, more schools, roads, and industry. Snack bars, supermarkets, and a car for every worker can come later." American government, with its subtle checks and balances and its stress on the virtue of compromise and evolution, appears too complex and slow-moving for Guinea's needs. In comparison, the Soviet system seems simpler and more direct, capable of harvesting quick results on a massive scale.

Communist China's revolution is also being held up as a model worth emulating. One of Guinea's biggest problems is that of breaking up the tradition of the "extended family," in which one man who works may support ten members of the family who don't. Following China's lead, Touré has initiated a "human investment" force, in which seventy per cent of the population will be required to "volunteer" twenty days' labor on state projects each year. It is estimated that one-fifth of the budget for Touré's new three-year plan will be paid for in "human investment."

One Big Party

Guinea's political backbone is a disciplined one-party machine, the Parti Démocratique de Guinée (P.D.G.). Founded just before independence as a national front made up of several political sects, the P.D.G. has become an extension of Touré's Comité Politique, which serves as a "Politburo" in which all major decisions are reached. The national assembly and the regional and village councils are all controlled by P.D.G. members who funnel party policies down to the lowest echelons and see that they are respected. Guinean students are mobilized in the P.D.G.'s junior branch, the J.R.D.A. Among other things, young J.R.D.A. militants are used to corral Guinean citizens into cheering sections along the parade routes of visiting VIPs; failure to show up means a thousand-franc fine.

In addition to these informal strong-arm tactics, Touré has not failed to use his full power and to exploit his widespread popularity to stamp out the slightest hint of opposition to his régime. In April, more than twenty Africans and a handful of French, Lebanese, and Swiss were arrested and tried for treason. The prosecution claimed that all the defendants were engaged in a plot to overthrow the government with arms smuggled in from Senegal. None of the defendants was permitted to testify, and there was no defense counsel; most of the accused were sentenced to death, and several died of "natural causes" before the trial ended.

"The people," says Touré, "want national unity and have endorsed our program as representing their best interests." If the people wish to modify party policy, they are free to do so, claims Touré—through the village and regional councils, i.e., within the party system. He proudly asserts that thus far the councils have uniformly endorsed ready-made party decisions which have been handed down for "discussion" at the local levels. To Touré, this is proof of democratic approval and not a reflection that few Guineans would dare question the party line.

"Yes, we have only one party in Guinea," Touré concedes. But he adds, "Do you want us to have fifty? That's what would happen if we allowed it. History, not a dictator, imposed one party on us. Look at the Congo today: dozens of parties and special interest groups are tearing the country apart. If real progress is achieved by the Congolese they will learn, as we have, that unity is essential to freedom."

In the interior city of Labé, slogans lining the wall of P.D.G. headquarters cry "Death to Opportunism!" and "down with Individualism!" and this tack is pursued with religious if not ruthless dedication. "Only the party," Touré has declared, "must direct the state."

In contrast to a generally admiring view of the East, Guinea's suspicion of American democracy is complicated by an exaggerated impression of the segregation issue. On a recent trip to Guinea, an interracial American student group found that eighty per cent of the questions they were asked dealt with segregation. At first, many Guineans believed the white and Negro members of this "Operations Crossroads Africa" group had been "instructed" to behave cordially to one another. Others, who wanted to come to America to study, were afraid that as Africans their lives would be in danger—not just in the South but everywhere.

COMMUNIST PROPAGANDA feeds freely on this distorted image of America. In Conakry's main bookstore I found thirty-three different magazines from China, Russia, and the satellites; many are specially edited for African consumption, and all of them are published in French. The only American publications are located in the U.S. Information Service library, and all but a few are in English. A cultural-affairs officer admitted, "We're still catching the devil here," although more than seven thousand Guineans visited the library in the first ten weeks after opening day, the Fourth of July. If adequate funds are forthcoming, the two-man USIS staff hopes to launch a mass English-language program; in the meantime USIS is broadcasting English courses over Radio Guinea which have generated an enthusiastic mail response not only from listeners within the country but from nearby Senegal and Sierra Leone. Touré has proclaimed English as Guinea's second language, and the U.S. International Cooperation Administration (ICA) has financed an impressive English-language program for Guinean teachers, run by a private firm, English Language Services, Inc. (E.L.S.), of Washington, D.C. More than a hundred graduates of the course are now teaching English in primary school. Today E.L.S. is conducting similar intensive classes in English for more than forty Guinean scholarship students who will arrive shortly in the United States to take up studies in American institutions. In all, the United States has offered Guinea scholarships for 150 students.

But ICA has not had the same success in its negotiations for direct

U.S. g At is contr on ag allies Cond migh enough strike ments exam mone that a other they where it me sians contra of a p diplom princ and Guine
sians Furth eign the C bassad status

THE cians rest. agenc corps not el that dated witho tends accept nation preced troubl said, in the aid."

On aborti agreed ment Conak vealed On th privile nonco ing" b

Wh that $1-mil

Novem

U.S. government technical assistance. At issue are the terms of the ICA contract, which is primarily based on agreements made with European allies after the Second World War. Conditions in the contract that might have appeared reasonable enough to a country like Britain strike sensitive Guineans as infringements on their new sovereignty. For example, the so-called "no duplication" clause requires that U.S. money must not be spent on projects that are also sponsored by aid from other countries; Guineans feel that they should have the final say as to where money is needed most—even if it means teaming up with the Russians on a common program. The contract also calls for the setting up of a permanent ICA mission with full diplomatic privileges, which means principally the right to import food and household effects duty-free. Guineans point out that the Russians don't demand these privileges. Furthermore, of the American Foreign Service personnel assigned to the Conakry embassy, only the ambassador is granted this special status.

THE SHARPEST DISAGREEMENT is over the question of giving ICA technicians diplomatic immunity from arrest. Guinea argues that ICA is an agency separate from the diplomatic corps and therefore its employees are not eligible. Again, we are reminded that the Russians have accommodated themselves to this condition without protest. In reply, ICA contends that its terms have proven acceptable to more than sixty other nations, including Ghana. But such precedents fail to sway Touré. "The trouble with you Americans," he said, "is that you are most interested in the form, not the substance, of aid."

On September 30, after months of abortive discussion, Guinea finally agreed to let ICA establish a permanent U.S. Operations Mission in Conakry. Neither country has revealed the details of the agreement. On the sensitive points of diplomatic privilege and immunity, ICA says noncommittally that "an understanding" has been reached.

While in Conakry I also learned that last June Guinea accepted a $1-million Public Law 480 grant of U.S. surplus agricultural commodities. While this agreement has not been formally announced, the United States is providing $500,000 in rice, $400,000 in flour, and $100,000 in milk products. Guinea will sell this food through commercial channels and deposit an equivalent million dollars in Guinean francs in a special U.S. account. These deposits are to be banked in Conakry and will be used to support future ICA development projects.

Reports of Guinea's latest deals with Moscow and Peking do not alarm ICA officials in Washington. Asked to comment on China's $25-million loan, one ICA spokesman said a few days ago: "More power to them. Our plans haven't changed. We're still anxious to conclude agreements with Guinea on a mutually acceptable basis." At the State Department, officials interpret Guinea's new willingness to negotiate with the United States as a sign that Touré may want to redress the overwhelming balance of aid he has accepted from the East.

Even Touré may find it difficult to avoid the kind of "asphyxiation" he warned against at the U.N. if he persists in wedging Guinea's entire economy to the Communist bloc.

Neutralism in Africa

W. A. LEWIS

IT IS TEMPTING for the great western powers to be angry with the new African states that vigorously proclaim their neutrality. After all, even when one has said the worst about colonialism, all the new African states owe some debt to their former governors for past help—cultural, institutional, and economic. All of them, except Guinea and the former Belgian Congo, have attained their independence in an atmosphere of friendship and good will, which some of the western states had hoped would also crystallize into military or economic alliances.

Some of the African states do indeed feel very strongly the urge toward continued association with their former rulers. Cultural ties are strong, and the habit of looking to London or Paris for news, ideas, entertainment, education, technical staff, and other associations is not easily shaken off. Probably Nigeria will remain British-oriented for some time, just as the Ivory Coast, Senegal, Tunisia, and some others are eager to retain special ties with France. But in the world we live in, any political alliance will inevitably be transitory.

The world is dominated by the antagonism between the Communist and the NATO countries. To the NATO countries it seems obvious that the new African states, fearing aggression or subversion by Communists, should ally themselves with NATO and even seek protection in the form of military bases. This, however, is not what Africans understand by independence. Some of the African leaders are disposed to take sides, but they will not prevail for long against the neutralist tide.

VERY FEW MEN ever wish to take sides in a quarrel they have not initiated. The appeal to constitute a Third Force is very strong, especially when it is wrapped in the cloak of peacemaking and conciliation. Even in Europe some politicians have yearned to be a Third Force, with Russia right on their doorstep. The new African states find that for years India and Egypt have led neutral blocs in their respective areas. If these countries can get away with it, the appeal of neutralism to African states south of the Sahara is even stronger.

To the average African politician, independence means freedom to do business with both sides. If the Soviet Union can have embassies in London, Paris, and Washington, then why should there be any bar against having Soviet embassies in Conakry, Accra, or Léopoldville? Any suggestion of such a bar implies that to him African countries are either less sovereign or less sensible than others, and is inevitably resented. Sooner or later every African state will insist on its freedom to have a Soviet embassy, and Soviet-bloc aid of all kinds.

To interpret insistence on relations with Russia as partiality toward Communism is a grave and dangerous error. Actually, most of these same African politicians are afraid of Russia—even more afraid than their European counterparts. In insisting on relations with Russia they may be naïve, but they are not partial.

Most African politicians fear the Soviet Union because they know full well that Communists deal ruthlessly with those who stand in their way. They are not meeting Communism for the first time. Communists have been trying to take over the colonial independence movements for forty years, without success. Many African politicians understand Communist tactics even better than their European counterparts because they have had more to do with Communists. Some have actually been in the Communist Party, and have come out disillusioned.

In inviting Russia into their countries even though they fear it, these politicians are walking a tightrope, and they know it. A Soviet embassy is not just a center for cultural relations. The Russians bring in as many of their people as they are allowed to do, flood the country with propaganda, give aid and instructions to local Communists, and try to prepare the country for membership in the Communist bloc.

Scared but Proud

African governments hope to evade trouble in two ways. First, by restricting the activities of the embassies. They restrict the number of persons who may come into the country, and they try to ensure strict observance of the diplomatic code. Obviously, if having a Soviet embassy in Nigeria meant only having ten Russian diplomats sitting in Lagos, the danger would be small. However, dealings with the Soviet Union mean not one embassy but ten. In addition, technical aid can quickly flood the country with Russian, Chinese, and other experts, whose extracurricular activities are hardly controllable. A large country like Nigeria could probably absorb all these people, but they are bound to make their mark on a small country like Guinea.

The second safeguard on which African governments rely is to ban native Communist Parties. This, however, is not a simple operation. It is easy to prohibit a Communist Party by law, and this has been done in nearly every African state (making these "neutralists" more anti-Communist, on the face of the matter, than most of the western states). But no law can prohibit fellow traveling, and Communist operations have never depended on having large mass support. What the Communists want is to get a few of their men into strategic positions, where they can influence policy and where, in circumstances of riot, mutiny, or other civil disturbance, they can at the crucial moment supply a leaderless and angry mob with firm and purposeful direction.

The real problem for African governments, then, is how to keep fellow travelers out of strategic positions. This is easier for the dictators than it is for democrats—and quite a number of African governments are democratic in the old-fashioned sense. The democratic parties cannot keep out fellow travelers, or prevent them from gaining popularity and becoming ministers in the government. The dictators can control membership of their parties and appointments to influential posts. But the dictators are attracted by the radical approach of fellow travelers. So they tend to surround themselves with fellow-traveling advisers, even though they are afraid of Russia.

These difficulties arise, however, whether an African state declares for neutralism or lines itself up with the West. Fellow travelers are a problem everywhere, even in the heart of the West. Indeed, they are less of a problem in Africa than elsewhere, because most African leaders value the notion of African independence much too highly to be willing to take orders from Moscow.

HOW SHOULD the West react? By understanding and accepting African neutralism. Those African countries that line up with the NATO countries should be regarded as windfalls. The others, which will be the majority, should be respected. There is no point in trying to oppose the entry of Russia into Africa. This is impossible, and by alienating Africa from the West it will have the opposite effect to that which is intended. African nations will have Communist embassies. They will also have Soviet economic aid, and will regard as enemies any persons who try to prevent them having such aid. To attack African neutralism or to try to stand in the way of African relations with Communist states is to play right into the hands of Russia.

The correct policy for the West is not to try directly to weaken African ties with Russia, but rather to strengthen African ties with the West. Russia has nothing to offer that the West cannot offer in greater abundance. Indeed, the West has great advantages over Russia in competing for African support. It starts with a great fund of good will, and a thousand ties of language, education, institutions, and culture; whereas the Africans fear Russia, and look to it for aid only as a last resort. If the Soviets win out in Africa it will be only because of western arrogance combined with western meanness.

Other People's Quarrels

Neutralism, like the penny, has two sides. Some African leaders who say to the West, "We don't want to get mixed up in your quarrels," are also saying, "And please keep out of our quarrels; we Africans will form our own Pan-African institutions in which to settle our own affairs." Since Africa is as quarrelsome a continent as Europe, the West must also decide what line to take toward African quarrels.

But neutralism does not necessarily just mean, "We don't want to get mixed up in your quarrels." Africans are not saying, "Let East and West have a war if they like, so long as we stay out." They are saying, on the contrary: "East and West must not go to war, and we Africans intend to do what we can to prevent them." Africans have arrived in great numbers in the United Nations declaring their intention to intervene in the quarrel between East and West and to effect some reconciliation.

If Africa insists that it is entitled to intervene in other people's quarrels, it must expect others to intervene in African quarrels. This is the mea-tionceptternreaswh-nowconfter-It-each-orgalems-othe-tiona-Wes-cess-cont-Asia-tiner-tivel-Afsula-involy be-are-of se-Decl-Afric—ovecou-ent a-in co-ence-

The-the V-playsmun-Euro-Euro-to clacolor-pure-they-has-does-in N-does-make-them-emb-sides-Russia-canno-with-its re-domand-nanc-Lie-same-If th-

Nov

meaning of joining the United Nations. U.N. membership involves acceptance of intervention in any international quarrel anywhere. The reason is simple: any quarrel anywhere, however remote and small, now threatens to become a world conflagration and is therefore a matter of world concern.

It would be pleasant, of course, if each continent could form its own organization to settle its own problems peacefully, without bringing in other continents or the United Nations. To a very limited degree, the Western Hemisphere has been successful on this score, but there is no continental organization in Europe, Asia, or Africa that can handle continental quarrels smoothly and effectively.

African quarrels cannot be insulated, partly because they do not involve only other Africans and partly because, even when only Africans are involved, Africa is not capable of settling them alone.

Declaration of Interdependence

Africa is still quarreling with Europe—over political rights of Africans in countries that are not yet independent and over the rights of Europeans in countries just reaching independence.

The first of these quarrels has put the West into a difficult position and plays into the hands of the Communists. Following rules that the Europeans made for themselves, each European country has been allowed to claim that its quarrel with its own colonies or overseas territories is purely a domestic affair. Hence, they have said, the United Nations has no right to debate what France does in Algeria, what Britain does in Nyasaland, or what Portugal does in Angola. But Africans did not make these rules and do not accept them. The United States has been embarrassed, and now reluctantly sides with Africans on this issue. To Russia it is a godsend. The West cannot straighten out its relations with Africa until it recognizes that its relations with Africa are not a domestic but an international issue, and liquidates forthwith all remnants of colonialism.

Liquidating colonialism is not the same thing as getting out of Africa. If the British had gotten out of Ghana when it became independent, the new country would have collapsed. What makes it possible for African states to become independent, despite the fact that they have so little trained personnel, is the fact that they have reached a modus vivendi with their former governors that enables civil servants and technicians to remain in former colonies. The two exceptions have proved to be tragedies. In Guinea, the French foolishly withdrew their personnel, and thus put Guinea into the hands of personnel from the Communist bloc. The United Nations went into the Congo passing resolutions to get the Belgians out, but the best hope for the Congo is that the United Nations will persuade the Congolese leaders to let the Belgian personnel in again. Perhaps they will learn their lesson from the fact that the Ghanaian force that went into the Congo to get the Belgians out was led by an English general.

The moral of this story is that Africa cannot for the time being live without Europeans. And Europeans cannot remain in Africa unless Europeans respect African independence, and unless Africans respect the Europeans who serve them.

Some of these Europeans will be Russians. In the Congo the United Nations has been maneuvered into appearing to work for two principles: "Get the Belgians out" and "Keep the Russians out." Both are silly slogans. The problem in Africa is to find terms that simultaneously keep the Europeans in, let the Russians in, respect African independence, and prevent East and West from fighting over Africa.

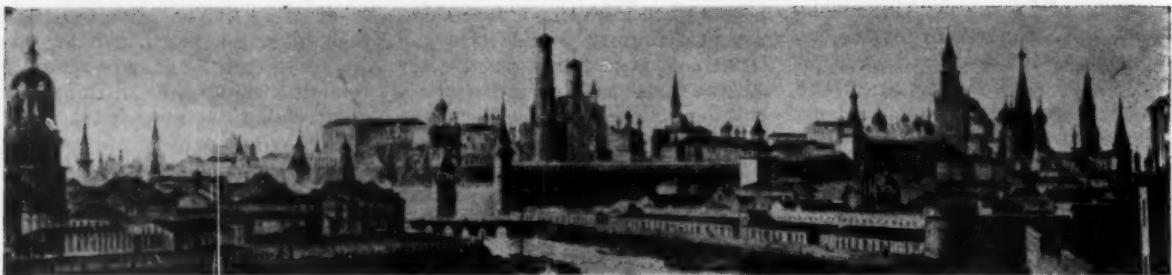

Apart from quarreling with Europe, the African states also quarrel bitterly with each other, especially in West Africa. It would be extremely fortunate if the West African states could form some sort of federation such as Ghana has been advocating, or even a mild institution modeled on the Organization of American States, which is championed by Liberia and Nigeria. Unfortunately, no such move seems likely at present. The leaders distrust each other too much, and are too jealous of their freedom of action to commit themselves to anything that savors of limiting sovereignty.

The West ought to support the idea of an Organization of African States on the American model, and the seed already exists in the (very poorly organized) Accra Conference of Independent African States. To Americans the advantages seem obvious, but the idea is very hard for Europeans to swallow, since the French cling to the idea of the French Community and the British cling to the idea of the British Commonwealth. Both the Community and the Commonwealth are excellent ideas, but they need not clash with an Organization of African States, and if they are made to clash, it is the Community and the Commonwealth that will be destroyed. The British know this, and the nature of their Commonwealth changes every day, adjusting itself to local nationalisms. But the French find this lesson hard to learn, even from so masterly a tutor as de Gaulle.

In the meantime, West Africans have many problems to solve in their relations with each other, problems they can most easily solve within the framework of wider international institutions. These problems are especially acute in the economic field—movement of goods across frontiers, access to ports of neighboring countries, customs unions, currency exchanges, regional research organizations, regional training schemes, and so on. The best place to reach agreement on such problems is the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, which is flanked by regional conferences of other U.N. specialized agencies.

Up to three years ago, the policy of the West was to keep the United Nations out of Africa; the creation of the Economic Commission was resisted to the bitter end. The time has come to put weight behind such organizations, since for the present they are the only hope Africans have of settling their problems quietly, without fear of any one African country's coming to dominate the rest. Africa needs the United Nations even more than the United Nations needs Africa.

Dialogue of a Tourist in Russia

MARYA MANNES

THE VIEW from the twenty-seventh floor of the Hotel Ukraine in Moscow should be exciting, for the eye has no impediment: from one window I could see the curve of the Moscow River beyond freight yards; from the other I could see the major artery of Kuznetsov Street, and far away, on the only rise, the imposing complex of the University on the Lenin Hills.

But there was a terrible loneliness about this view. The river was dead, without shipping. The acres of identical yellow apartment houses in unbroken rows seemed without life. Kuznetsov Street, like all the Soviet avenues built for a limitless future, was ten lanes wide, and though never free from a moderate stream of trucks night and day, there was about it an inhuman desolation: it was a street of wheels, empty of men. And beyond the river, the only vertical piercing this horizontal monotony was the high steel tower that jams broadcasts from the West. It straddled there like a robot guardian of the people. Even at night, when lights make cities exciting, the view from the Hotel Ukraine was not. It evoked only the consciousness that this was indeed Moscow and that I was in another world inexpressibly distant from my own. I felt shut in, shut out: the chronic climate of this city and state.

Yet the room was a haven of sorts from the Ukraine lobby, a formidable prelude to Russian life, more dismaying even than the first view of the building itself. Moscow's skyscrapers—the University, two hotels, two apartment houses, and two government bureaus—are huge without being heroic, high without being lofty. Palaces of pride, they are frosted with dismal decorative detail in the worst nineteenth-century taste. And yet, in the interior dialogue that, in my isolation, became the only free exchange, a second voice said, "What they aimed for was good: to honor, with great planning and effort, the concepts of government, housing, learning, and hospitality." And when I was taken through the University, this honoring was constantly evident: in the spacious procession of halls and rooms, in their permanent materials, in the care with which they were swept and polished.

But at the Ukraine I encountered two immediate depressants: the dim lighting that makes all public places in Moscow forlorn and joyless, and a smell that I have never smelt before and find hard to describe. It is a mixture of stale cooking, old clothing, and the exhalations of rooms dusted but never washed. One could not say that the lobby was airless, because the doors to the outside chill were always open and no one took off his overcoat. But what one breathes there is nevertheless not oxygen.

How Weary, Stale, Flat . . .

The people in the lobby at the Ukraine prompted my first voice to say, "This is the new capital of the world." Here were all the races from Near East to Far East, from Africa to Siberia, from the Caucasus to China. Here were eggplant-skinned men in caracul caps and pure white linen tunics, coffee-colored men in long camel's-hair nightgowns, Peking Chinese in austere and neutral uniforms, and the ubiquitous satellite hordes in light gray coats and hats and cheap tan shoes that proclaim the new proletarian, technological man. I found myself amused at the leap of kinship that arose in me when I saw the craggy features and easy strides of British delegates (there was an oceanographic conference going on) or heard the gentle Oxford accents issuing from the soft faces of Indians.

As for the hotel staff, they presented my first view of that fatigue which is stamped, it seems, on the face of every Russian over thirty. I have never seen more tired people than the women—most Russian clerks are women—at the administration desks, the Intourist office, and in the elevators. Some of the operators are fairly young and use lipstick or wear beads and high heels. But most are gray with weariness, their ungroomed hair tucked under the eternal kerchief, their shoulders huddled beneath shawls. Weary too are the women guardians on each floor, the dispensers of keys, the watchers of aliens, the arbiters of service. But the added dimension of power is inclined to make them hostile: suspicion is their companion, and rarely permits a smile except to their own kind, the maids on the floor. On the streets of Moscow and Leningrad I saw such women multiplied a thousandfold. I had always thought of the Russians as intense and volatile, surging between exuberance and despair, but I have not seen a society so devoid of beauty or the manifestations of joy, so monolithically drab as these people appear to be.

BUT my second voice would say, "Wait a minute. Your little guide is pretty and gay, isn't she?" And I remembered the handsome young couple at the Marriage Palace in Leningrad, flushed with pleasure and embarrassment; the handsome aging wife of the architect in the same city; the pleasant young woman on the train from Moscow to Leningrad who offered me her food; the warm and eager ex-sailor on the plane back to Moscow, determined to make me understand Russian, pressing small gifts on me.

As for fatigue and drabness, my second voice said, "Why not? Revolution, war, famine, desolation have taken a terrible toll of them, and so has the merciless absence of privacy. For people who live several to a room, sleep is a holiday."

As for the coldness to Americans, the U-2 struck much deeper than we know, reviving fear. The Russians are told, every day and night, how we plot against them. I have heard what they hear.

My second voice also reminded me that I had no access to their private pleasures: somewhere the Russians must smile. Surely the elite musicians and writers and actors and scientists and party bosses in their handsome skyscraper flats laugh and joke and horse around of an evening, and even their poorer comrades—the people you see—must soften with vodka after a day's work.

Perhaps the distractions of beauty, hilarity, or overt sex are permissible only in the context of purpose. A woman can be beautiful to serve the Soviet stage or ballet or cinema; laughter is for the circus; sex is for the Soviet family. But to what end is woman merely beautiful in herself? I looked for feminine consciousness of body, but even the few well-made and well-complexioned young women dressed to deny their breasts and waists and legs and made no effort with their hair. Beauty as a luxury had a low priority.

Yet then I remember a fashion show at the enormous filigreed GUM department store, where pretty women modeled attractively simple clothes in current style. The crowd—the women kerchief-headed, as many old as young—looked at them with a look of transfiguration, as if shown the Holy Grail.

I saw the Soviet people not only during their endless shuffle along the streets, going to and from work, but also in parks constructed for their relaxation, in theaters, in museums, and in exhibitions. Except for ecstatic clapping at a Richter recital, a general gravity prevailed. Only the children seemed released in laughter during their games or at the wonderful theaters run for them. And here again we have a Soviet pride, their dominant one. They swaddle their children with love and tenderness, and the children—strong and vital and shining—seem to be free of the distractions of doubt and fear. I saw a number of them in a typical day nursery, variously dressed, ebullient. They sang a May Day song like little patriots and they chanted, "What do all people want? Peace! Peace! Peace!" But they also sang "Hickawry dickawry duck, ze mouse rhan up ze cluck," and although they were disciplined and orderly, I was conscious of no repression. Nor did I see a clouded or withdrawn face.

Will they grow like their fathers and mothers? Or is this a new race freed from the crushing burdens of past wars and the rising state? When they inherit the four-day week, the new apartments, and possibly world dominance, will their faces lighten? Or will they also inherit the airless isolation, the rigid compartmentalization that seals up their present?

A Brilliant Sterility

I had not realized before just how encapsulated and stratified the Russians were until my own status in their land shed light on this. I came as a tourist, although the word "Writer" followed "Occupation" in my passport and I made no secret of my professional interests. But did this fact help me to meet Soviet writers? No. Had I come under the aegis of the ministry of culture, this could have been arranged, but as a tourist it was difficult if not impossible. Furthermore, what kind of writer did I want to meet? On what subject? When I said it did not matter—journalist, novelist, critic, anything, so long as the writer was willing to talk to me—the shades were pulled down. I had to be specific. All right, I said, I write a lot of television criticism; could I meet a television critic? We have none, they said. Well, could I meet a writer who was interested in the subject of mass communications and their function? After a week, a highly intelligent editor of a technological magazine for youth was produced and a conversation of reasonable flexibility did ensue. But this entailed maximum effort on the part of the intermediary. I had hoped to see a ballet class, but when they asked "Are you a dancer?" and I said I was not, the issue was closed. I asked to see a certain building. "Are you an architect?" they said; and when I said no, they asked, "Then why are you interested?" The idea of a broad humanistic interest seemed inconceivable.

The more I saw and the more I heard, the more apparent this lack of cross-pollination became. Musicians met musicians, dancers met actors, teachers met teachers, and editors met editors, and only in the highest echelons, it seemed, did they overlap. But how can a culture emerge from this? Where is the generous, general room of ideas on which imagination lives?

By and large, Soviet culture lives off its own fat. Superb as their execution of ballet may be, professionally healthy as their theater productions can be, brilliant as their performing musicians are, the forward movement seems to have come to a halt decades ago. Imagination and vitality still prevail in their marvelous puppet shows, but the word is "still"; they were always superior and unique.

Visual beauty died with the Czars; the Kremlin itself, the onion-domed churches, the palaces of Petersburg—for it is Peter's city, given glory by foreigners like Rossi and Rastrelli and Cameron—only these in Soviet Russia enrich the eye and elate the heart. The painting, sculpture, and architecture of the Soviet state are generally atrocious. I thought if I saw another statue of Soviet youth striding forward into the future, arms outstretched, I would scream. Everywhere this deadly moralism sucks the life out of contemporary expression. It belongs, in fact, with death:

the graves of the party notables and artist-heroes in the Kremlin cemetery are surmounted by marble portraits of the deceased, faithful to the last mole. In heavy cold rain, with the leaves fallen and sodden, more than they had died.

YET balanced against these present blights, said my other voice, is the enormous care with which the present Russians preserve their past beauties. Millions of rubles and artisan-hours go into restoring the palace at Tsarskoe-Selo (now Pushkin village) from the vicious mutilations of the German Army: a job of many years and infinite skill and patience, whether in the reconstruction of elaborate inlaid flooring or of the innumerable painted vignettes that adorn walls and ceilings. When work is finished, as in the Ostankino Palace outside Moscow, the result is breath-taking in its elegance; and the shuffling crowds, equipped with the mandatory felt slippers, are awed into silence. They know what they have inherited. And my other voice said surely this past loveliness must in time educate the eye and refine the taste. Perhaps the old, simple people who stand enthralled before the cloying illustrative realism of party painters may not change, but what of the young?

Whatever I saw, wherever I went in Moscow or Leningrad, my interior dialogue persisted, balancing first impact with further thought. I would quail at the bleakness of Moscow's great arteries but admire the Soviets for their generous planning. When I despaired at the constant injection of dogma into the young, I had to remember the faces of schoolchildren at the Theater for Young Spectators in Leningrad, in whose faces I saw a purity and sense of wonder rare in our own young.

The mediocrity and expensiveness of most consumer products was everywhere evident. But so was the profusion of bookshops, and the fact that subway stands were filled not with comics but with inexpensive books on everything from electronics to fairy tales. I remember, too, that on the train from Moscow to Leningrad, every third Russian appeared to be reading a book.

In an atmosphere that seemed to me cold if not hostile, I could not help but notice the kindness of the people to each other and especially to their children. Only in queues—their daily, hourly penance—did they explode into truculence, and I could not blame them.

The relentless bleakness of their new housing repelled me, but I had to remember that they paid a minimal rent, not only for their premises but for a system that included a nursery, a clinic, a well-equipped playground, workshops, and sometimes a theater in each block unit.

I have mentioned their compartmentalization, but there is something to be said for providing spacious quarters (usually the palaces of former nobles) where scientists, teachers, doctors, architects, and farmers can meet their own kind after hours. It is all part of this pattern of pride in profession which, precisely because it is collective rather than personal, sustains the Soviet citizen. It is their "togetherness." Like ours, too, it can mean an abdication of responsibility.

There are, no doubt, delinquents in Russia. I saw a number of furtive adolescents who bore little resemblance to the heroic figures of Soviet youth breasting the future. But the Soviets manage to keep most of their young off the streets and busy, not only in school hours but in the many "circles" provided by the labor or professional units to which their elders belong. Thus the son of an auto worker can go to the local auto circle after school and find there the room and equipment for any hobby that may attract him, from ship-model building to acrobatics. I find it sad that "aimless play" is discouraged, but an equal case could be made against the aimless entertainment of our own spare time.

TO ANYONE who has free access to many (and contradictory) truths, the Soviet enclosure provokes frustration and incredulity. Every day, in print, on radio, on television, the facts are withheld or tailored to their strait-jacket needs. During the U.N. weeks of explosion, Khrushchev won victory after victory. Neither word nor camera betrayed the slightest setback. The Soviet people, presented hourly with the tumultuous applause of the Communist bloc, were spared all evidence that a great part of the world, neutral as well as western-oriented, was shocked and alarmed by their chairman's attempt to wreck the United Nations. Castro was, of course, lionized as freedom's champion. Imperialism, colonialism, aggression—daily the tired, inapplicable slogans paraded the pages and the air waves. I said some of this, in modified terms, to a Soviet writer and broadcaster. "It is true," he said, "that we still have too much dogma. It is a leftover from the war, and it will decrease as time goes on."

They say, of course, that we have our own dogma: a blanket hatred and fear of Communism that makes any recognition of its achievements politically and morally impermissible. Communication, certainly, was not made easier by the many American tourists who preferred to expound the superiorities of our way of life rather than listen to the accomplishments of theirs. "They are not," said one weary American official, "doing us much good."

Certainly, too, three weeks is no time to judge a society kept aloof not only by an isolation officially imposed and a distrust genuinely felt but a language unshared. What I have written here is merely a chronicle of reactions, immediately felt and then deliberately examined. And if I were left, after a period of turmoil and questioning, with anything approaching a large conclusion, it would again have two voices.

I believe that the Soviet people are on an ascending graph and that they know it: the climate of confidence in Soviet destiny is palpable, as is the will and capacity to pay for it. They know that they could not have afforded the democratic luxury of choice.

Yet I cannot believe that this degree of enclosure can be forever sustained. Too many Russians must be too intelligent to nourish themselves indefinitely on the synthetic food of dogma, too talented to find in technology their only expression. I have the feeling that there is in many, and will be in many more, an unquenchable desire to see the world whole and to walk freely among others. A direct and meeting gaze in the eyes of some Russians gave me the feeling that within them, too, a constant dialogue goes on. But their second voice was inaudible.

VIE

A

UNL
the paint ing ac is the but of low br two ro houses dle are way li most, bombs made b to live garden ed fro revolu heart Often does n the str privacy tains b collect the pe been m a crow voice spoke about the pe of the have r to spea

A LAN poet books i first no day M a movi misfor these n English way th has ens than h he cou taken u sociolo take m

Novem

VIEWS & REVIEWS

A Cry from the Brick Streets

JOHN ROSELLI

UNLESS you are determined to see the country as the travel posters paint it, you can hardly avoid coming across the secret England—which is the England not of remote cottages but of brick streets. Red brick, yellow brick, brick blackened with soot, two rooms upstairs, two down, the houses stretch out in long rows, huddled around factories, follow the railway line with the doggedness, almost, of telegraph poles. Though bombs and slum clearance have made holes in them, sending people to live out in apartment blocks and garden suburbs, these wastes inherited from the earliest of industrial revolutions still lie all round the heart of each great English city. Often they seem empty: the climate does not encourage people to live in the street, and even by day love of privacy keeps the front-room curtains halfway closed. In England's collective voice, too—its literature—the people from these streets have been mostly a presence in the wings, a crowd in the distance, at best a voice filtered through a distorting speaker. One of the hopeful things about England now is that at last the people of the brick streets, and of the gray but leafier suburbs they have moved out to, are beginning to speak in a voice of their own.

ALAN SILLITOE, a young, uneven, and extremely talented novelist and poet who has brought out three books in the last two years and whose first novel, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning, is now appearing as a movie, has both the luck and the misfortune to be among the first of these new voices. He is lucky because English people's obsession with the way they and their neighbors live has ensured him quicker recognition than he might otherwise have won; he could be unfortunate because, taken up as the English are with this sociological narcissism, it would not take much to ticket him for life as

"that writer who really knows about semi-skilled industrial workers." The signs are, though, that Sillitoe is a good enough writer to survive the labeling. Meanwhile he is remarkable because he writes as a clear voice out of the brick streets without showing himself at all aware that such a voice is anything out of the ordinary.

The English class system is tiresome but inescapable, in literature as in life. The almost infinite ways it has of chopping up a nation, by accent, by schools, by vocabulary, by clothes, have ensured that most writers have simply not known how people lived outside their own segments of the middle class. Virginia Woolf showed herself more honest, not more ignorant, than most when she wrote, in a sympathetic preface to a collection of working-class women's writing, that she could not identify herself with the authors: "One could not be Mrs. Giles because one's body had never stood at the wash tub; one's hands had never wrung and scrubbed and chopped up whatever the meat may be that makes a miner's dinner." And although Mrs. Woolf did not try to find out what went into a miner's dinner, those who did, like George Orwell, generally got hot and bothered in a way better suited to working off their own guilt than to telling the truth. Even D. H. Lawrence had a schoolteacher mother to egg him on to gentility, and even without her he came out of the coal-mining community—the aristocracy of the British labor movement, pioneers in adult education and politics. Again, there have been proletarian novels by proletarian authors, but often dyed deep in Marxist self-consciousness. These writers and many more have taken up attitudes at bottom condescending—whether they have shown working-class people as funny, tragic, strange, or mysteriously potent, they have really been saying,

"See how these people live who are so different from you and me." Sillitoe is so much inside his people's skins that you feel he could not take up an attitude toward them if he tried.

ONE REASON may be that he has chanced to bypass the two things that usually take hold of gifted young Englishmen from the brick streets and entangle them for life in a crisscross of class loyalties it takes half their energies to sort out: the university scholarship and the middle-class English wife. At thirty-two, Sillitoe is a slight, pale figure, as unremarkable at first sight as the remnant of flat, rapid Nottingham intonation in his speech, and unlike several well-publicized young English writers, he has kept his personality out of the public eye. He left school at fourteen and followed his father into the Nottingham bicycle factory that looms at the bottom of the street in several of his stories. Nobody wanted him to write—certainly not his school, to which he is grateful for leaving him alone. Toward the end of the war he had already "for some indescribable reason . . . taken to reading books"; service in the R.A.F. in Malaya and a long illness did the rest.

Sillitoe says he would have wanted to write even if he had gone back to the factory (and, reading his work, one can believe that something would have forced its way out). But tuberculosis, which kept him in the hospital for a year, is a disease with a potent effect on writers; it stimulates the mind while forcing the body to rest. It also left Sillitoe with a pension of forty-five shillings ($6.30) a week and a doctor's injunction not to work for a while. So he and his young wife, Ruth Fainlight—a New Yorker by birth and also a poet—innocently went off to a cottage inland from Merton.

"I'd read how D. H. Lawrence had gone off to Germany with thirty shillings in his pocket," Sillitoe recalls; "I didn't realize there was a time lag between him and me." Through a misunderstanding the Sillitoes arrived at the cottage to find snow on the ground and no furniture inside. "So for a week we put suitcases together and slept on them. . . . We were both city people and didn't

MARBORO'S FABULOUS FALL

SALE

Prices slashed on treasured books

SAVE UP TO 86%

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY!

marboro Dept. R-602, 131 Varick St., New York 13, N.Y.

Please send me, postage prepaid, the bargains circled below:

Enclosed find $ _____ Send C.O.D.* Minimum purchase $2.00.
 Charge my Diners' Club account # _____ Limited to orders Charge my American Express account # _____ of $5.00 or more.

1111 1414 2109 2481 2894 2961 3019 3079 3148 3152 3561 3618 3668 3723

3728 3742 3868 388G 3907 3914 3916 3917 3933 3934 3935 3936 3945 3947

3948 3949 3958 3961 3975 3980 3982 3983 3989 3998 4001 4010 4011 4012

4014 4015 4022 4023 4025 4027 4036 4041 4044 4051 6549 7334 8193 8258

8578

P168 P761 P771 P776 P777 P778 P779

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

ZONE _____

STATE _____

Check here if you receive our monthly bargain circular

New York City residents add 3% sales tax. *A few cents extra for C.O.D.

Add 25¢ per title for deliveries outside U.S.A. and possessions.

10-DAY SATISFACTION OR MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE.

WHEN IN NEW YORK CITY, VISIT A MARBORO BOOK SHOP
 47 West 42nd Street • 8 East 59th Street • 144 West 57th Street
 56 West 8th Street • 390 Fulton Street (Brooklyn)

3914. CHARLESTON FURNITURE 1700-1925. By E. Milby Burton, Director of the Charleston Museum. A large, lavishly illustrated volume about the furniture in and around the famous South Carolina city; text, notes and addenda about early Charleston, kinds of furniture, styles, influences, prices, woods, cabinet makers, etc. 150 photos and drawings. Index. Pub. at $10.00. Only 2.99

3618. LOLITA. By Vladimir Nabokov. The most remarkable, most original, most sensational and most controversial book written in recent years, originally banned in Paris and a storm-center here and in England. Complete and unabridged hard-bound edition. Pub. at $3.00. Only 1.49

3148. Art News Annual—PORTFOLIO #1. The fabulous 1959 edition of this gorgeously illustrated, hardbound periodical of literature, theatre, music, science and the visual arts; featuring articles on Looking at Pictures, Wozzeck, Color into Space, poetry and sculpture, and an essay on Cezanne by Rainer Maria Rilke. Many lavish color plates. Pub. at $3.00. Only 1.49

ILLUMINATED MUSIC MANUSCRIPTS

Rare and beautiful 16th-century European decorative pages of music. The bars of music, hand-lettered in black and red, are set next to magnificent initial letters with exquisite floriation in gold, purple, green, red and blue. Each is re-created on a sheet of imported vellum that simulates exactly the time-worn beauty of the original and makes a unique item of interior decoration. 27 1/2" high x 19 1/4" wide. Only 2.99

P-776. MUSIC MANUSCRIPT I. From Spanish Source. Special 4.95
P-777. MUSIC MANUSCRIPT II. From German Source. Special 4.95
 The Pair of Manuscripts Special 8.95

3917. THE GERMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC ANNUAL 1960. The more than 100 magnificently reproduced photos in this handsome 9" x 11 1/4" volume—candid shots of people caught off-guard, carefully arranged shots of architectural splendors, breathtaking shots of the endless wonders of nature, and much more—attest to the artistry of the camera, when in the right hands. Included is a special section of marvelous color photos. Pub. at $7.95. Only 2.99

4001. THE LAST HURRAH. By Edwin O'Connor. The rollicking best-seller about the unscrupulous political ascent of a "boss" who is half-hero, half-cad and all pure enjoyment. Pub. at $4.00. Only 1.49

3947. RETURN TO TRADITION: A Directive Anthology. Ed. by Francis B. Thornton. A large size, 926-page collection of excellent pieces reflecting the Catholic Traditionalist view; selections by famous English, French, Irish and American poets and writers as varied as Chesterton, Hopkins, Rimbau, Maritain, Colum, Kilmer and Merton. Pub. at $6.50.

3961. AUTOMOBILE YEAR 1958. The handsome fifth issue of the annual review of the world's autos, magnificently illustrated with many diagrams and photos in color and black-and-white; featuring articles on cars of the year, all 1957 championship races. Bugatti, etc. 9 3/4" x 13". Pub. at $9.95. Only 2.99

1414. THE GIRDLE OF CHASTITY: A Medieval Historical Study. By Eric John Dingwall. A fascinating, scholarly and scientific history of one of the strangest, cruellest and most humiliating devices fashioned by man; surprisingly recent and widespread use of chastity belts; a survey of poem stories and books in which they are mentioned. Photos and drawings. Hardbound. Special 1.99

3880. Simone de Beauvoir's MEMOIRS OF A DUTIFUL DAUGHTER. This amazingly candid autobiography is both intensely personal in its revelations and broad in its application to the struggle of all women for physical and intellectual freedom; by the famous friend of Jean-Paul Sartre and author of The Second Sex. Pub. at $5.00. Only 1.49

6549. AN UNHURRIED VIEW OF EROTICA. By Ralph Ginzburg. Intro. by Theodor Reik; pref. by George Jean Nathan. A forthright, lucid discussion of the 2,000 classics of erotica in the rare book rooms and restricted shelves of the world's great libraries—synopses and extracts of famous works, descriptions of erotica collections, etc. Fine binding; boxed. Special 2.99

4041. FREUD AND CONTEMPORARY CULTURE. Ed. by Iago Galdston; M.D. Distinguished lecture by world famous authorities on Freud's influence on medicine, psychiatry, anthropology, mental hygiene and our culture today. Pub. at $3.00. Only 1.49

3152. THE VALADON DRAMA. By John Sorna. The turbulent story of Suzanne Valadon—famous painter, mother of Maurice Utrillo, mistress of Renoir—who lived and loved at the height of the colorful Impressionist era in France. Illus. Pub. at $4.95. Only 1.49

3916. THE PRAEGER ENCYCLOPEDIA OF OLD MASTERS—230 Illustrations in Color. From A to Z, from the middle of the 13th century to 1800, here is complete coverage of the old masters: 750 entries on painters, techniques, galleries and collections, critics and prices. An invaluable, handsomely reference work. Pub. at $6.75. Only 2.99

4014. ETERNAL EGYPT. By C. Robichon & A. Varille. A superb book of photographs of the monuments and splendors of ancient Egypt, the color of life today in the cosmopolitan cities and the unchanging routine of the follablin of the Nile valley. 144 plates magnificently reproduced in gravure. Detailed notes on each picture. Special 2.99

3968. considering bizarre terror, starling, nifcen, Whale, Novel literature, 4036, fission, A self-preserved, A $25.

P-771. AND Tanc
 Chas nature, Dep this back an i ship stock

3935. Wer, novel vividly harsh

3742. An in perspective

43 illi

7334. RIAGE

resume strange records, tiquity, fascina society, 3975. The "scribes aspect explain, asured 1111. GRAM in on words, colloquy, of the for, foid, 1

3019. JAZZ
 Benji jazz nific in "mu

3989. PICTUR

marvelous Spain, to the facts, planati drawin 4044. folder. The p vitality colors

P-168. Leger, colored to you, duce large sing

2961. Lawre recentl thoriz Marc Leish.

4015. study discuss the the and in 8193.

3019. Helmu and a his tr and C trated 3079.

3019. The A racy outgrou influence

3019. Helmu and a his tr and C trated 3079.

3868. Baudelaire: FLOWERS OF EVIL. Generally considered to be the epitome of decadence, this fascinating classic plunges the reader into a world of bizarre surprises, astonishing beauty and mysterious terror. Transl. by C. Bower Alcock; spiced with startling drawings by Beresford Egan. Special 1.00

3936. MOBY DICK. By Herman Melville. The magnificent story of Captain Ahab's pursuit of the White Whale; often considered to be the Great American Novel, and certainly one of the classics of all world literature. Special 1.00

4036. TEACH YOURSELF TO PLAY PIANO

Professionally Without a Teacher. By Margaret Digrys. A self-taught basic course in piano playing technique presented in 27 lessons. Boxed set includes two charts and separately bound sets of lessons. Only 4.95

A $29.50 value. Only 4.95

4-779. YUAN DYNASTY PAINTING: HORSE AND GROOM. Continuing the tradition of the T'ang Period, this painting, done by the artist Chao Yung in 1347, captures the vigor and naturalism of the famous T'ang sculptural art. Depicting a horse and a groom in a red coat, this wide panel features, against a soft blue background, the signature and seal of the artist, an inscription and 25 different seals of ownership. Silk screened into textured linen stock. 39" wide x 22" high. Special 4.95

3935. WHITE-JACKET or The World in a Man-of-War. By Herman Melville. A semi-autobiographical novel about life aboard a U.S. frigate in the 1840's, vividly depicting the character of Navy men and the harsh punishments and abuses of the time. Special 1.00

3742. MAKING A START IN ART. By Anna Airy. An inspiring book answering questions about tones, perspective, anatomy, composition and washes, illustrated with diagrams and analyses of famous works. 43 illustrations, 8 in color. Pub. at $5.00. Only 1.49

7334. CURIOS CUSTOMS OF SEX AND MARRIAGE. By George Riley Scott. An intimate factual resume of sex and marriage among peoples both strange and familiar. Interesting, even astounding records of practices obscured in the mists of antiquity or the darkness of ignorance, and equally fascinating ones that come to light in our present society. Illus. Pub. at $7.50. Only 2.95

3975. MODERN CABINET WORK. By J. Hooper. The "Bible" of cabinet makers the world over; describes in detail all types of cabinetry, covers, every aspect of construction, design and manufacture; 2,000 explanatory drawings, including working and measured plans. Pub. at $12.50. Only 4.95

1111. CONCISE DICTIONARY OF AMERICAN GRAMMAR & USAGE. Two valuable reference works in one—defines hundreds of commonly misused words, their nuances of meaning, their standard and colloquial usage, plus a discussion within the listings of the basic principles of grammar, rhetoric and writing. For every reader, writer, teacher. Ed. by R. Whitford. Pub. at $4.50. Only 1.98

3019. THE ENCYCLOPEDIA YEARBOOK OF JAZZ. By Leonard Feather. Foreword by Benny Goodman. The world of contemporary jazz revealed in 150 biographies, 100 magnificent photos, articles on what's happening in jazz, best records, the jazz fan and the "musicians' musician". Pub. at $3.95. Only 1.00

3989. Lascaux, Altamira, etc.—THE ROCK PICTURES OF EUROPE. By Herbert Kuhn. The marvels of prehistoric art, the rock paintings of Spain, France, Scandinavia and Russia, are related to the evolution of all cultures with a wealth of facts, many splendid illustrations and exciting explanations in this compelling work. 91 plates, 144 drawings in the text. Pub. at $7.00. Only 2.98

4044. MOSAICS OF RAVENNA. A magnificent folder of color prints of twelve exquisite mosaics. The prints, removable for framing, capture all the beauty of these art masterpieces in their vibrant colors including brilliant gold. 11 1/2" x 13 3/4". Special 4.95

P-168. FRENCH POSTERS: Picasso, Chagall, Leger, Miro, Matisse. A portfolio of 8 brilliantly colored posters that will add a sophisticated sparkle to your library, den, office or living room. Reproduced directly from the original lithographs, their large size (16" x 20") makes them ideal for hanging singly or in a group. Pub. at $8.00. Only 2.98

2961. LADY CHATTERLEY'S LOVER. By D. H. Lawrence. The original, unexpurgated edition that recently made publishing history; the complete, authorized Lawrence text, plus an Introduction by Mark Schorer and a Preface by Archibald MacLeish. Hardbound. Pub. at $6.00. Only 1.00

4018. TABOO. By Franz Steiner. A far-reaching study of a major concern of social anthropology; discusses Polynesian, Victorian and Biblical taboos, the theories of Frazer, Freud and others. Bibliography and index. Special 1.98

8193. MAN AND MAMMOTH IN MEXICO. By Helmut de Terra. A world renowned archaeologist and anthropologist presents a fascinating account of his travels, adventures and discoveries in Mexico and Central America. His startling finds are illustrated by fine photos. Pub. at $3.00. Only 2.98

3079. LUCIAN'S TRUE HISTORY & Lucian, or the Ass. An unexpurgated translation of lively, raucous Greek tales, outrageous tall stories and more outrageous boudoir adventures. The classic that influenced Apuleius' Golden Ass and other great satires. Illus. Pub. at $3.00. Only 1.49

5-761. CHINESE ART: HORSES IN ACTION. A pair of highly decorative panels, eminently suitable for adding just the right touch to your home decor. Each panel features four prancing steeds, brushed in with all the simplicity and verve of the Chinese calligraphic style, in soft black strokes on a field of tan. 44" high x 14" wide. The pair, special 1.98

8578. DICTIONARY OF PHILOSOPHY. Ed. by D. D. Runes. Invaluable for the layman, student or teacher. All-embracing in content, clear and authoritative in its exposition and explanation of such terms as Platonism, Thomism, Idealism, Pragmatism, Semantics, etc. Includes concise biographies of the leading thinkers from earliest times to the present. Pub. at $6.00. Only 2.98

4051. THE KELMSCOTT CHAUCER. The works of Geoffrey Chaucer in a facsimile edition of one of the masterpieces of book production, the famous Kelmscott Press edition, considered second only to the Gutenberg Bible as an outstanding typographic achievement. Here are the complete original texts plus 87 magnificent wood engravings and innumerable borders, decorations and initials by Edward Burne-Jones. Sumptuous binding, all-linen paper, 8 1/2" x 12 1/2". Complete glossary of terms. Pub. at $17.50. Only 9.95

3949. SOCIAL THEORISTS. Ed. by Clement S. Mihanovich. Eminent Catholic sociologists discuss the great social thinkers and theories of Western civilization; includes an 80-page Who's Who in Social Theory, an index of names and an index of subjects. Pub. at $3.50. Only 1.49

3723. THREE NOVELS OF COLETTE: Gigi, Chance Acquaintances, Julie de Cornillon. All complete, showing three facets of Colette's inimitably drawn worlds of love and music halls and Parisian high society and their colorful inhabitants. Pub. at $3.50. Only 1.00

3668. MASOCHISM IN MODERN MAN. By Theodor Reik. An authoritative and popular writer on psychoanalytical subjects tackles the paradox of voluntary suffering and the pleasure connected with it, its psychology and origin, the Freudian view, masochism and sex, social and cultural aspects, martyrdom, etc. Pub. at $4.75. Only 1.98

2481. MUSIC BOXES: Their Lore and Lure. By Helen & John Hoke. Illustrated by Nancy Martin. A fascinating and delightful book about music boxes that tells their whole bright history, how they began in bell towers and moved into clocks, watches and snuff-boxes; with drawings and photos and a 10-inch lp record of music box tunes. 10 1/2" x 10 1/2". Pub. at $10.00. Only 2.98

4023. APPLIED MECHANICS—DYNAMICS. By George W. Housner & Donald E. Hudson. A college text, profusely illustrated, with appendices, bibliography, index, problems and answers. First edition. Pub. at $4.50. Only 1.98

3728. John F. Marquand: NORTH OF GRAND CENTRAL. Three complete novels: The Late George Apley; Wickford Point; H. M. Pulham, Esquire; intro. by Kenneth Roberts; prefaces by the author. 1267 pp. Pub. at $5.75. Only 1.98

2109. RALPH WALKER: Architect. A personal testament by the famous "architect's architect", in which he discusses monumental architecture, world's fairs, libraries, laboratories, city planning, the use of nature, specific buildings, etc., drawing upon his years of experience and examples from his own considerable achievements. This exceptionally handsome book is profusely illustrated with drawings, photos, sketches, plans and diagrams, many of them in full color, 10" x 11 1/2". Boxed. Limited edition, pub. at $25.00. Only 3.95

3958. THE GOLDEN GOSPELS OF ECHTERNACH: Codex Aureus Epternacensis. A breathtakingly beautiful volume devoted to one of the finest extant examples of medieval book illumination. In this handsome work are magnificent reproductions from the Codex, an analytical study of the book and an account of its fascinating history. 96 pages of interpretive text by Peter Metz; 97 full-page half-tones; 13 full-page 5-color plates; cellulose jacket; boxed. 9 1/2" x 13". Pub. at $24.95. Only 9.95

4022. THE ELEMENTS OF PHYSICAL CHEMISTRY. By Samuel Glasstone. An illustrated, 695-page college text, with problems and answers, tables and charts. First edition. Pub. at $6.50. Only 1.98

3948. THE ROMAN CATACOMBS AND THEIR MARTYRS. By L. Hertling, S.J. & E. Kirschbaum, S.J. An intriguing examination of the 90-mile maze under Rome, the rich and unique depository of the early Christian church, and what it reveals about the faith and culture of the first Christians. Illus. Imprimatur, Pub. at $4.25. Only 1.00

4011. DICTIONARY OF OBSOLETE ENGLISH. By Richard C. Trench. A definitive glossary of English terms that have either changed in meaning or been discarded—words common to Chaucer, Shakespeare, Dr. Johnson, even Dickens and Browning, that are obsolete today. A fascinating handbook for everyone intrigued by the colorful, the strange and the bizarre in our language. Pub. at $3.75. Only 1.98

3934. TYPEE. By Herman Melville. A romance of the South Seas recording the adventures of a whaling ship and the capture of Melville by natives; a vivid picture of civilized man's contact with the exotic life of the tropics. Special 1.00

3945. EUROPEAN MUSIC IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY. Ed. by Howard Hartog. A collection of studies by noted music critics concerned with Stravinsky, Bartok, Hindemith, Schoenberg and the new works and experiments of the past 60 years. Pub. at $7.50. Only 3.49

4010. Bertrand Russell: UNDERSTANDING HISTORY. A world-renowned iconoclastic philosopher contributes a biting analysis of current misconceptions of historical events. Hardbound. Special 1.49

4012. THE GOOD CITIZEN'S ALPHABET. By Bertrand Russell. An alphabetical satire on the social, moral and philosophical man of our times—cartoons by Francisika Thermerson and captions by Russell, etched in acid, washed with compassion and altogether very amusing. Pub. at $2.75. Only 1.49

2894. REMBRANDT—48 Paintings in Full Color. Intro. & notes by Trewin Copplestone. Portraits, self-portraits, group portraits, religious and genre paintings from the total output of this greatest of masters. The paintings are grouped in themes for a better understanding of the aims of the artist. 9 1/2" x 11". Special 1.98

4027. ASTRONOMY. By Robert H. Baker. A profusely illustrated 528-page college text; with problems and answers, bibliography and index. Sixth edition. Pub. at $3.75. Only 1.98

3907. LISTENING WITH THE THIRD EAR: The Inner Experiences of a Psychoanalyst. By Theodor Reik. A fascinating work in which Dr. Reik exposes the inner workings of the analyst's mind as he probes the patient's subconscious. Pub. at $6.50. Only 1.98

3949. CHINESE WALL RUBBING: CELESTIAL FIGURE WITH LUTE. This unique and exquisitely handsome decorative hanging, the original of which was carved on a cave temple wall by some unknown master before the birth of Christ, depicts a stylized angel in flight, playing a lute. Now this long-hidden masterpiece has been reproduced by silk screen on interestingly textured, hand made Japanese rice paper. 36" high x 24" wide. Special 2.98

8258. PSYCHIC ODDITIES. By Hereward Carrington. A book about the incredible, the mysterious and the bizarre—visions, dreams, hauntings, astral projections, poltergeists, stigmata, materializations, thought-forms, levitation, hypnotism and automatic writing. Pub. at $3.00. Only 1.49

3561. THE LOBSTER'S FINE KETTLE OF FISH: A Complete Fish & Shellfish Cookbook. By Mike Linz, Stan Fuchs & Loris Troup. More than 400 recipes, ranging from everyday family fare to exquisite gourmet delicacies, plus menu marginalia from New York's most famous seafood restaurant. Pub. at $3.95. Only 1.49

3983. MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE MEDICINE. By Benjamin L. Gordon, M.D. A fascinating book that fills one of the voids in medical history; a thoroughly documented work on the practice of medicine during the Middle Ages and early Renaissance, that will be of great interest to historians, physicians and students. Illus. Over 800 pp. Pub. at $10.00. Only 4.88

P-778. FEININGER: TOPSAIL SCHOONER. An unusual watercolor by a noted American artist whose precise construction, fluidity of tonalities and linear sensitivity is brilliantly apparent in this gray, blue, amber, yellow and black silk screen reproduction. 26 1/2" high x 30" wide. Special 2.98

3980. PEOPLE, PLACES, THINGS, IDEAS. Ed. by Geoffrey Grigson & C. H. Gibbs-Smith. The whole panorama of human achievement is presented in this magnificent, lavishly illustrated, highly readable 4-volume boxed set. Here are a host of widely divergent but uniformly colorful personalities, the countless objects, from the ingenious to the bizarre, they have devised, the ideas that have bemused, inspired and enslaved them, and the sites they have approached in awe or remade with awesome ability. Each 7 1/2" x 10" volume of over 450 pages includes 200,000 words of text and 176 pages of illustrations, 16 in full color. Handsomely boxed in full-color slipcase. Pub. at $24.95. Only 9.95

4022. THE ELEMENTS OF PHYSICAL CHEMISTRY. By Samuel Glasstone. An illustrated, 695-page college text, with problems and answers, tables and charts. First edition. Pub. at $6.50. Only 1.98

3948. THE ROMAN CATACOMBS AND THEIR MARTYRS. By L. Hertling, S.J. & E. Kirschbaum, S.J. An intriguing examination of the 90-mile maze under Rome, the rich and unique depository of the early Christian church, and what it reveals about the faith and culture of the first Christians. Illus. Imprimatur, Pub. at $4.25. Only 1.00

4011. DICTIONARY OF OBSOLETE ENGLISH. By Richard C. Trench. A definitive glossary of English terms that have either changed in meaning or been discarded—words common to Chaucer, Shakespeare, Dr. Johnson, even Dickens and Browning, that are obsolete today. A fascinating handbook for everyone intrigued by the colorful, the strange and the bizarre in our language. Pub. at $3.75. Only 1.98

3934. TYPEE. By Herman Melville. A romance of the South Seas recording the adventures of a whaling ship and the capture of Melville by natives; a vivid picture of civilized man's contact with the exotic life of the tropics. Special 1.00

3945. EUROPEAN MUSIC IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY. Ed. by Howard Hartog. A collection of studies by noted music critics concerned with Stravinsky, Bartok, Hindemith, Schoenberg and the new works and experiments of the past 60 years. Pub. at $7.50. Only 3.49

4010. Bertrand Russell: UNDERSTANDING HISTORY. A world-renowned iconoclastic philosopher contributes a biting analysis of current misconceptions of historical events. Hardbound. Special 1.49

even know what kind of wood we ought to gather for heating and cooking on. We got a lot of twigs and they all burnt up at once."

After two years there the Sillitoes spent four more on Majorca, piecing out the forty-five-shilling pension with English lessons and translations while Ruth worked off and on as a travel-agency courier—"It consisted mainly in making sure the lavatories flushed in houses that British holidaymakers were going to stay in," she says. And all the time Sillitoe wrote—poems, novels, and stories most of which he has since scrapped. When he and his wife decided they had had enough of being expatriates and came back to England, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning was still being rejected by three publishers in turn. (The paperback edition is now coming out in half a million copies, a high figure in Britain for a first novel that is not about war.)

Sillitoe has now published three books*: Saturday Night, a vigorous, mainly realistic novel of working-class life; The General, an allegorical novel, in my opinion a failure though politely received by critics who said it was anyhow nice to see that the author was not getting into a rut; and The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner, a collection of short stories, most of them episodes of Nottingham life in the Saturday Night manner. All this work dates back to Sillitoe's Majorcan days except the long title story of The Loneliness; since this story, the most recent, is also the best and most nearly flawless thing he has done, the outlook is encouraging.

HIS THEME is rebellion, a theme he shares with other young English writers like John Osborne and Kingsley Amis. But the work of these others gives the impression that the things rebelled against are trivial or ill understood while the author's feelings are inexplicably intense. Sillitoe's work is about a rebellion much more profound, not just against the circumstances of life in Britain today but against all organized society, almost against life itself; yet the author's own attitude is not easy to make out. He is impersonal, a strong but anonymous voice—and this is one reason for calling him a better writer than most of his contemporaries.

To the social notetaker, the rebellion is most accessible in Saturday Night. Arthur Seaton is a young Nottingham factory worker who shares Sillitoe's initials, his old job, and his old address but is his direct opposite in looks. (If the book is autobiographical beyond these surface details, it must be chiefly in the sense that what Arthur is, Sillitoe might have become.) He is the man many people think of as the new prosperous British worker; he could earn more than he does if he didn't begrudge paying income tax or fear a drop in his piecework rates, and he is proud of the £100 worth of good clothes he has accumulated. Aside from this his job means nothing to him; what he enjoys is drinking, fishing, and lovemaking—through most of the book he is having an affair with Brenda, a workmate's wife, and later with her sister as well. As a self-conscious member of the British working class he is not too young at twenty-two to be marked by the depression years—even longer and grayer in Britain than in America. For the social notetaker this already dates the book by ten years or so. Now and then he is glad that under full employment his mother enjoys "week after week of good solid wages" instead of scouring the shops for a few cigarettes on credit, while his soured father is "happy at last [with television] . . . after all the years before the war on the dole, five kids, and the big miserying that went with no money and no way to get any."

This fellow feeling for parents and relatives, though, is about as far as Arthur goes in sharing the lenity of modern English social life. "Intelligent co-operation" to him means simply "getting yourself caught in a half nelson." "I've never queued in my life," he declares, flouting a rule more widely observed in England than any Biblical commandment. Even then he does not so much thrust himself to the head of the queue as refuse to line up; his violence comes out in aimless fights and in daydreams that show him machine-gunning all the embodiments of authority—"crack-crack-crack-crack-crack—The snot-gobbling gett that teks my income tax, the swivel-eyed swine that collects our rent, the big-headed bastard that gets my goat when he asks me to go to union meetings or sign a paper against what's happening in Kenya . . ." Even when he settles down into marriage—even when the drunken, adulterous Saturday-night binge comes to a climax and gives way to the calm of Sunday morning—there is "still the vast crushing power of government against which to lean his white-skinned and bony shoulder, a thousand of its laws to be ignored and therefore broken. Every man was his own enemy, and only in these conditions could you come to terms with yourself. . . ."

EVERY MAN his own enemy: this is the bottom layer of Arthur's rebellion. Sillitoe gives him a good deal of ordinary human warmth and balance, and as it works itself out in action his settling down with young Doreen rings absolutely true. Curiously, though, the writing is at its clumsiest when Arthur persuades himself in the abstract that he can now "live with his feet on the ground" and yet not "go against his own strong grain of recklessness."

The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner takes the rebellion nearly all the way and in doing so achieves a formal perfection quite unlike the exuberance of Saturday Night. Life as a race or flight is a trite idea; but there is something especially fitting about this soliloquy by Smith, a Borstal (reformatory) boy of seventeen, who is allowed to train for a big race by going for long solitary runs through the fields and woods and who then deliberately fumbles the race within sight of the tape. The young burglar's life is so much a fugue that as he unfolds it on his runs and during the race the image works at all points. It is not just that he sees himself as one of the "Out-law" people, committed to fighting the "In-law" people—the "pop-eyed potbellied governor" and the (far from wonderful) British police who he hopes may soon find the kicks and black eyes coming their way "like in Hungary." He has a standard of "honesty"—which means acknowledging that between Out-laws and In-laws there can

*Two already out in the United States. Knopf will publish the third, The General, in January.

here was an ancient Greek who was so anxious to have people remember him that he set fire to the temple of Diana just to immortalize his name.

But if you want to be remembered, there's no need to go to such extremes—all you have to do is give THE REPORTER this Christmas.

The friends to whom you give THE REPORTER will remember you each time a new issue arrives . . . each time THE REPORTER anticipates and answers important questions . . . each time it clears up a complex story in the news with cogent, concise analysis. They'll think of you with gratitude every time THE REPORTER's urbane blend of fact and fun catches their fancy.

And you can please your friends in all these ways—twenty-four times this coming year—for only a few dollars, thanks to THE REPORTER's money-saving Christmas rates. After the first gift at the $6 rate, you pay only

Also, by entering or renewing your own subscription now, you can arrive immediately at the reduced rate for all your gifts. If you already have a subscription and it still has a while to run, we'll simply add on your renewal whenever it expires.

Here's one more advantage, too—while it would be very difficult to find another gift as apt and original, THE REPORTER is so easy to give! No shopping ordeals or post office pilgrimages—just fill out the airmail order form opposite and mail it.

And giving THE REPORTER also softens the seasonal strain on your budget. We'll be glad to bill you after the first of the year.

A few days before Christmas, your friends will receive a handsome Christmas card announcing your gift, and the special holiday issue of THE REPORTER will follow soon after.

So to give your friends the different sort of gift they'll gratefully remember you for twenty-four times this coming year . . . fill out the form and mail it today.

THE REPORTER

660 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 21, N.Y.

only be war to the knife; he sometimes feels tempted to wish that In-laws like the governor would be "honest" too instead of setting him races to run—but if they were "it'd mean they'd be on my side which is impossible."

ALTHOUGH the boy gives the social notetaker enough information to "explain" his conduct (his father died messily of cancer, his mother is promiscuous), this is a story by a poet and the core of it lies elsewhere, in a passage that shows Sillitoe's writing at its best.

"By the time I'm half-way through my morning course, when after a frost-bitten dawn I can see a phlegmy bit of sunlight hanging from the bare twigs of beech and sycamore, and when I've measured my half-way mark by the short-cut scrimmage down the steep bush-covered bank and into the sunken lane, when still there's not a soul in sight and not a sound except the neighing of a piebald foal in a cottage stable that I can't see, I get to thinking the deepest and daftest of all. The governor would have a fit if he could see me sliding down the bank because I could break my neck or ankle, but I can't not do it because it's the only risk I take and the only excitement I ever get, flying flat-out like one of them pterodactyls from the 'Lost World' I once heard on the wireless, crazy like a cut-balled cockerel, scratching myself to bits and almost letting myself go but not quite. It's the most wonderful minute because there's not one thought or word or picture of anything in my head while I'm going down. I'm empty, as empty as I was before I was born, and I don't let myself go, I suppose, because whatever it is that's farthest down inside me don't want me to die or hurt myself bad."

But he knows that one day he will slide down too fast.

The reason for thinking that these two books are fresh and valuable while The General is a dreamlike short story blown up beyond its true size is not just that when Sillitoe stays in the brick streets he can write about people whose minds and feelings many Englishmen have never seriously penetrated. The General, written at about the same time as Saturday Night, has the feel of a less mature work—still by a born writer, but one who can lapse into sentences like "Evart, all through this duorocketting, felt uneasily as if his words were submarine harmonics of some higher meaning." A tale of a commander in an odd imaginary war (like a Korea without air power) who captures an entire symphony orchestra, it is wholly given over to making some large statement about freedom and values, yet the other two books in their seeming down-to-earthness may have far more to say on the subject.

Arthur and Smith both yearn for freedom, but they come at the very tail end of the great English anarchist tradition. Arthur foresees the day when some of the workers will choose to starve, or "play football, or go fishing up Grantham Cut," in spite of anything managers or unions or police may say. He concludes: "Well, it's a good life and a good world, all said and done, if you don't weaken, and if you know that the big wide world hasn't heard from you yet, no, not by a long way, though it won't be long now." But Arthur sounds not so much convinced that this millennium is coming as glad of an outlet for his violent feelings: against authority, both outside and within himself, in day-dreams he can shoulder his machine gun. Smith, more darkly still, foresees the day when "in the end the governor is going to be doomed while blokes like me will take the pickings of his roasted bones and dance like maniacs round his Borstal's ruins."

MODERN ENGLAND offers young men like these no outlet in political violence. Until lately it could offer them the tradition of Bunyan and Blake—of the man who withstands all authority because he has had a vision of the new Jerusalem and his own soul is guide enough to lead him to it. In an apparently satisfied society it now looks as though that tradition is all but spent, and all it can manage by way of Jerusalem-seeking is little interior explosions of a hatred that fights, as much as anything, itself. Or is it simply that some Englishmen have been exploding inwardly for a century or two, unregarded until the Sillitoes came along to tell us about it?

A Far, Far Better Thing

JAY JACOBS

THE Italian director Roberto Rossellini has added little if anything to the technical aspects of his craft since his early postwar films, and consequently his latest effort, General della Rovere, may not have quite the impact on its audiences that Open City had some years ago. While the new picture hasn't much to offer in the way of innovation, it is distinguished by a degree of balance and maturity that some of the director's earlier work may have lacked, and seems to me far and away the finest thing he has done.

Just how much credit for the general excellence of the film is Rossellini's exclusive due is a moot point, since it is unthinkable that any other actor around today could have handled the title role as consummately as does Vittorio de Sica. I shall simply say the director deserves all the praise he has received (the film has garnered a hatful of international awards) and concentrate on de Sica's accomplishments from here on in, because he has turned in a performance almost without parallel in the history of the medium.

THE STORY is set in 1943, in Nazi-occupied Genoa, and traces the spiritual metamorphosis and ultimate redemption of a thoroughly odious confidence man named Bardone: an unctuous, scrounging, cowardly impostor not above gam-

Given

THE SECOND By WINSTON Editors of Life Life's 2-vol.
words. 300 p.

MATHEMATICS
A lucid text color pictures to science Plus number

DINOSAURS and Other The aweso lion years a Color pictur

Give your child the most precious gift of all — knowledge

THE SECOND WORLD WAR

By WINSTON S. CHURCHILL and the Editors of Life. Specially edited from Life's 2-volume $25 edition. 80,000 words. 300 pictures. (8½ x 11½) $7.95

THE STORY OF GEOLOGY

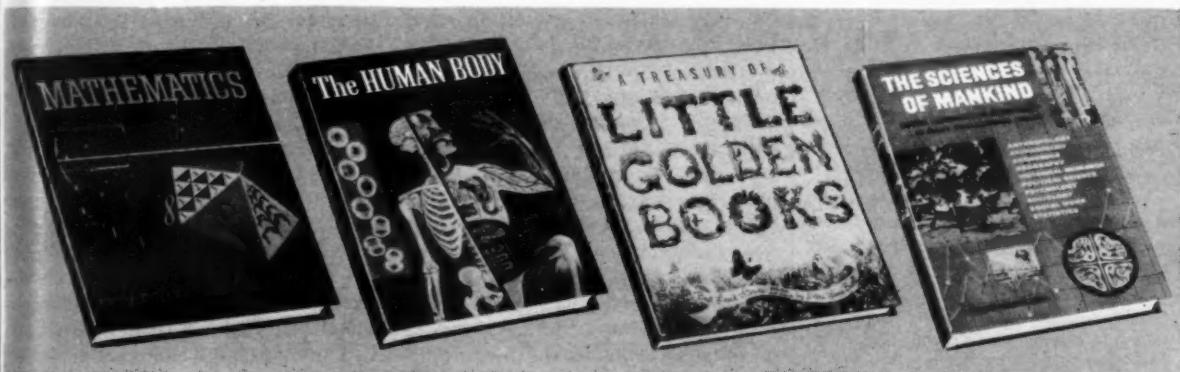

Earth's geological wonders explained: volcanoes, glaciers, earthquakes, etc. Over 350 color photographs, paintings, diagrams, maps. $4.95

THE AMERICAN INDIAN

By OLIVER LA FARGE. A magnificent, authoritative account of Indian history, culture, and civilization. 400 pictures, most in full color. $5.95

THE GOLDEN BOOK

PICTURE ATLAS OF THE WORLD
The lands and people of the world, in 1,000 color photographs and maps. Deluxe 3-volume set. Boxed, $10

MATHEMATICS

A lucid text and hundreds of full-color pictures introduce youngsters to science of numbers and space. Plus number tricks and games. $3.95

THE HUMAN BODY

The parts of the human body and how they work, explained in non-technical language and illustrated with over 200 color pictures. $4.95

A TREASURY OF LITTLE GOLDEN BOOKS

In one big volume: 45 favorites, selected by Ellen Lewis Buell, Children's Book Critic, N. Y. Times. $3.95

THE SCIENCES OF MANKIND

The work of the anthropologist, archaeologist, economist, and other social scientists clearly described. Over 200 full-color pictures. $4.95

DINOSAURS

And Other Prehistoric Reptiles
The awesome creatures of 200 million years ago, their rise and fall. Color pictures on every page. $2.95

McCALL'S GOLDEN DO-IT BOOK

160 colorful pages jam-packed with creative activities for boys and girls. Companion volume to McCall's Giant Golden Make-It Book. $2.95

GOLDEN CAPITOL FIRST LEARNING GAMES

Big, colorful kits that introduce the pre-school child to simple concepts through delightful games. Each kit contains a Teaching Guide for parents, playing board, and activity materials. Commended by Parents' magazine. NUMBERS, COLOR, SHAPES, PEOPLE, THINGS THAT GO, ANIMALS. Each, $1.95

GOLDEN  PRESS

Publishers of The Golden Book Encyclopedia and The Golden Book Picture Atlas of the World

“not only heroic but as ingenious and exciting as any pieces of international intrigue I've read about... an extraordinary experience...”

—KATHERINE GAUSS JACKSON, Harper's

In what is surely the most melodramatic, tragic, yet inspiring story of our age, Pulitzer Prize-winner Herbert Agar traces the unprecedented history of Jewish rescue and relief and the formation of a nation from the remnants of a scattered people. To tell this story in all its scope and dramatic detail, Agar turned to the activities of the American Joint Distribution Committee, whose brave effort has enriched the lives of countless people. Through the nightmare of Hitlerism it worked steadily to save what could be saved. And when the holocaust was over, the JDC was there to begin reconstruction, foster the infant state of Israel, and protect the victims of new oppression. Inevitably filled with horror and disaster, this history—written by a non-Jew—is a shining example of the will to survive.

$5.00

THE SAVING REMNANT

AN ACCOUNT OF JEWISH SURVIVAL
by HERBERT AGAR

At all bookstores $5.00

THE VIKING PRESS
625 Madison Ave., New York 22

bling away funds entrusted to him by distraught parents who believe he can ransom their sons out of concentration camps. Our con man, a civilian who calls himself Colonel Grimaldi, receives still another name and a not altogether welcome mock promotion when—as a result of pressing his usual bill of goods on a well-heeled young-woman already widowed by a firing squad—he runs afoul of the neighborhood's ranking SS man. The latter, a relatively humane and completely atypical film Nazi played skillfully by Hannes Messemer, proposes that Bardone save his skin by posing as General della Rovere, an Italian hero whom the Germans have inadvertently shot and—to facilitate a scheme by which they hope to cripple partisan resistance—would like very much to resurrect in some way.

Bardone, always quick to recognize the buttery side of his bread, agrees to impersonate the general (who has ostensibly been captured) and takes up residence in a prison for war criminals, where he is to decoy a partisan leader into revealing his identity. Bardone is given a pathetic hero's welcome by his fellow prisoners; and he gradually gets so carried away by his own impersonation that, as the film draws to its conclusion, he is the hero he pretends to be, and—unlike the real General della Rovere, who, as it happens, panicked, bolted, and was shot in the back—dies angrily and nobly.

The apparent ease with which de Sica explores the ramifications and permutations of Bardone's flexible personality and his assumed personalities is simply astonishing. He constructs his character as mica is constructed: thin layer upon layer, each so transparent that its subtle coloration is hardly visible, until the whole has become the inevitable but nonetheless transformed sum of its parts; it is as though light were passed through a thick pack of photographic negatives and somehow produced a coherent positive. From the opening scenes, in which we find Bardone cowering behind his own impressive façade, to the final moments, when the façade has crumbled to reveal the only meaningful General della Rovere—the plain, un-magnified human being who at last realizes his real worth—there isn't a misstep or a false note. To watch de Sica closely as he diffidently announces for the first time that he is the legendary “Generale della Rovere,” as he becomes more at home in his deception and begins to savor all nine rolling syllables of his assumed identity, and as the ultimate meaninglessness of these hollow sororities comes home to him is to experience a thrill of recognition with which only the movies can—and seldom do—provide us.

I can think of very few movies one would have been the poorer for having missed. This is one.

THE THIRD PANEL in Satyajit Ray's triptych of contemporary Hindu life, The World of Apu (which was preceded by the widely acclaimed Pather Panchali and Apajarito), is a fragile, almost dreamily contemplative examination of the trials of young manhood. It will hardly appeal to those purists who insist that any film that doesn't move along as rapidly as a Tom and Jerry cartoon constitutes a violation of the medium; but the moviegoer who can put up with the placid tempo and childlike (and occasionally, I'm afraid, somewhat childish) simplicities of Indian existence will find it a worthwhile experience indeed. The story concerns an impecunious student who impetuously marries a total stranger to save her from a life of completely undeserved disgrace, and then falls deeply in love with her during the few months of cohabitation the fates permit them. The idyll ends abruptly when the bride dies in childbirth; and the widower, in an access of grief, renounces his child, his job, and his ambitions (which take the form of an autobiographical novel) for what amounts, more or less, to the life of a solitary beatnik. He is eventually traced to central India by an old friend, persuaded to visit his young son, and moved to accept the responsibilities of parenthood. To summarize the plot this baldly, however, is comparable to doing the same disservice to a novel by Turgenev. Mr. Ray's forte is the evocation of mood and atmosphere, and the film is replete with moments of rare beauty and tenderness.

The Electronic Globe

ALBERT BUSH-BROWN

THE PLAYERS of the Harvard Dramatic Club, who presented Troilus and Cressida at the opening of their new theater in Cambridge on October 15, vividly and infectiously enjoyed Shakespeare, even his wordy and discursive moments, and they reveled in their new instrument, the Loeb Drama Center, toward which John L. Loeb, a New York investment banker, donated a million dollars.

It is an admirable building: a workshop, yet gay and dignified; sensitive, yet a sturdy tool; allowing great freedom and yet very exacting despite that fact. The Center gains much of its success from the client, a committee of Harvard professors who knew what they wanted the building to do. That essential condition for good architecture reflects in this instance a revolution in the dramatic arts. Essentially, the effort is to make the actor the dominant personality and to involve the audience intimately in the creation of mood and action—a process well known from the beginnings Thornton Wilder made in Our Town. To achieve this, the stage must be open and available, admitting change readily, and the seating must be flexible and offer no barriers to the stage, so that the space where action occurs may be molded and manipulated by light, sound, color, and motion experienced up close and at great distances, above and below.

Great strides toward new theatrical experiences have been encouraged by theatrical groups such as ANTA, AETA, and ACTA, some with support from the Ford Foundation. Summer stock and theater in the round, off-Broadway, and the small theaters at colleges and universities have also been experimenting. The main attempt has been to shake loose from the theater that has been traditional since the Renaissance—the type where, as at Vicenza, Palladio created a bank of seats facing a proscenium and a deep stage platform complete with a permanent set consisting of a city with three streets seen in perspective. This was a radical departure from the Greek theater and from the cathedral steps that formed the platform for Gothic mystery plays. It meant that the audience was remote from the spectacle and could never enjoy the immediacy or the range possible in a more flexible arrangement such as the Japanese Kabuki offers. Thirty-three Broadway houses are of the Renaissance proscenium type, often marred by distended sight lines, rent-paying balconies, bad acoustics, and interfering columns. Indeed the American musical comedy, with its strong music and visible dances, its shouted lines, its acrobatics and its whirling spectacle, is an answer to the theater that kills all chance for subtlety or nuance.

Numerous new theaters are pressing toward the new ideal. In 1951, a circular plan at the University of Miami and a hexagon at Sarah Lawrence essayed the transformation. Stratford, Ontario, has a Shakespearean theater with seats arranged around a projecting stage in a 225-degree arc. (Multipurpose uses still harm several attempts. At the University of Illinois, for instance, a colossus for 1,800 theatergoers doubles on other nights as a basketball stadium for 18,000. M.I.T.'s Kresge Auditorium suffers from multiple uses and also from a spherical form that inhibits circulation.) At Dartmouth, at Oberlin, at Wellesley, at Baylor, and at Grinnell, new theaters are also breaking free from the Renaissance form. These and others intended for Lincoln Center in New York and the National Cul-

our times

The critics all agree that
"Our Times"
belongs in your library

a rich, 512-page collection of the pieces that made THE REPORTER
famous!

"Only a few of the rarer New Yorker pieces surpass these articles in journalistic effect and literary distinction."

The New York Times

"If the United States has a counterpart of the distinguished London Economist, The Reporter is it."

Kansas City, Missouri, Star

"Here one can review in full color the physical drama, the startling achievement . . . of the midcentury years."

The Saturday Review

For your permanent collection, here are the articles, essays, reviews and poems that established The Reporter over the past ten years as America's most provocative and penetrating magazine.

ORDER YOUR COPY RIGHT NOW!

FARRAR, STRAUS & CUDAHY, Dept. R4, 19 Union Square West, New York 3, N. Y.

Please send me my copy of OUR TIMES
at $6.50

Check Enclosed Bill Me
New York City residents add 3% sales tax

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Zone _____ State _____

Important Reading

KOREA AND THE FALL OF MacARTHUR

By TRUMBULL HIGGINS. In re-evaluating the Korean conflict and MacArthur's recall, the author makes a significant contribution toward our understanding of the complex military problems of today.

$5.00

THE AMERICAN HISTORIAN

By HARVEY WISH. An intellectual history of America as reflected in the minds of the historians, from Cotton Mather to Allan Nevins, who charted its progress.

$7.50

OBLIGATION AND THE BODY POLITIC

By JOSEPH TUSSMAN. An original approach to the problem of political values, using the analytical methods of twentieth-century philosophy.

$4.00

THEORY OF FILM

The Redemption of Physical Reality

By SIEGFRIED KRACAUER. "Will make a deep impact in all places where the cinema is regarded as an art. The most important work to date in the English language on the theory and aesthetics of the Film." — PAUL ROTH, author of The Film Till Now. Illustrated. $10.00

At all bookstores

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

tural Center in Washington promise imaginative theater in imaginative architecture.

But the possibilities are already visible at Cambridge now, where the architect, Hugh Stubbins, turned a neat trick by providing an attractive and compelling exterior while preventing a spacious and flexible interior from becoming so architecturally exciting as to overshadow the play. Here technology stands in the service of art, with the integration of electro-mechanical systems of a fully flexible, fully mechanized theater within an architectural setting, so that nothing raw and mechanical intrudes. In part, that was aided by George C. Izenour, of Yale's School of Theater Design, who was responsible for developing three systems: the lighting, which a single operator can control by manipulating a console according to a lighting score that calls for changes in colors, intensities, and directions of lighting that have been preset on a panel; the rigging, where thirty compact electric winches can rig and fly all sets in any position, thereby effecting economies in stagehands, ropes, counterweights, space, and supporting structure; and the staging, where hydraulic lifts in the pit lift and pivot platforms so that seats can be arranged to create three different types of theater: the traditional proscenium type, an Elizabethan form with a projecting apron stage and seats on three sides, or a modified theater in the round with seats facing each other across a central stage.

THE WONDER is that all the required machinery is so unobtrusive. For Troilus, Stephen Aaron, the director, wisely chose to select the Elizabethan theater and to keep one set and one staging throughout the play, working with lighting and action to make the space plastic, forgetting the mobility the theater might display. Seen as Aaron intended, the theater is quiet and powerful; not even the ventilating system hums.

The entrances to the auditorium are gracious, right off the sidewalk of Brattle Street, and the foyer offers ample space both to move and to be pressed by the excited crowd. One passes easily to a central entrance and moves right or left past convenient cloak alcoves to enter midway at the sides, where a passage affords a pleasant view of the audience above and to the sides. The seats are comfortable and substantial; the air is pure and comfortable; the stage is completely visible from any of the 515 seats; and there is a fine lobby for intermissions, with a spacious terrace beyond facing the garden belonging to the house of the president of Radcliffe.

For a theater of this stature it is important to have a noble and enduring play. The Center has a quiet unity, with its black ceiling, wooden baffles shielding lights, and simple forms; and the set for Troilus is a stark, angular cubistic acropolis: the Greek camp outside Troy, where the wantonness of Cressida and the bulkiness of powerful Achilles reveal the touch of nature that makes the whole world kin.

Unfortunately, too many scenes were played down front, without implying the depth and range of the stage; there were few overlappings and simultaneities of scenes; and exits and entrances were slow and troublesome. Except for one long and effective departure by the fearful Cassandra and a few bounding departures by Thersites, the actors too quickly bridged the distances and lost the opportunities for long throws and the diagonals that evoke space.

But often in the latter part, especially in the scenes leading up to the battle, there were impressive groupings, and the black lighting achieved spectacular silhouettes that showed the versatility of the stage.

Particularly effective was an amusing Pandarus titillating an inquisitive but seemingly uninterested Cressida with descriptions of the parading generals. The two stood downstage peering over the edge while the generals passed in review at midstage behind them. The same clever device asked the audience's participation in the scene where Troilus bitterly learns of Cressida's infidelity: Troilus and a brilliant Ulysses, who never failed to command the entire stage, stood down front facing the audience, while Cressida and Diomedes, also facing the audience, conducted their tryst on the acropolis upstage. It was a good illusion that suggested much for Cambridge theater in the years to come.

The Process of Education

By Jerome S. Bruner. This book does not ask why Johnny can't read, but it proves that Johnny can read and learn much more than he is now being taught. A distinguished psychologist advances this view, showing how children can grasp basic concepts in science and humanities far earlier than has ever been thought possible. $2.75

The Economics of Defense in the Nuclear Age

By Charles J. Hitch and Roland N. McKean. This penetrating inquiry anticipates the economic adjustments we must make as the revolution in defense technology continues to advance. Most importantly, this book is concerned with selecting defense policies that will most efficiently use our economic resources in research and development, civil defense, and deterrence. A RAND Corporation Research Study. Illustrated. $9.50

The Diplomacy of Economic Development

By Eugene R. Black. An astute analysis of the "revolution of rising expectations" now underway in the underdeveloped countries of the world, together with concrete proposals for making economic aid a tool in creating a working partnership between "developed" and "developing" nations. $3.00

Industrialism and Industrial Man

By Clark Kerr, John T. Dunlop, Frederick H. Harbison, and Charles A. Meyers. An exciting new view of the metamorphosis which is everywhere diverting the lives of men into new channels — a view particularly related to the roles of managers and managed in new societies, but extending into the inherent nature of all industrial societies in an age of total industrialization. $6.00

The Creative Arts in American Education TWO ESSAYS

By Thomas Munro and Herbert Read. In a straightforward, meaningful essay, Mr. Munro shows how the arts — recognized as important, but frequently brushed aside in American high schools — can make great contributions to our students' personal development. Sir Herbert Read goes on to discuss the issues that currently alienate art from life, and with bold new ideas proposes the way to unite the two sides. $2.50

Source Book in Astronomy: 1900-1950

Edited by Harlow Shapley. 69 non-mathematical selections from the work of such scientists as Albert Einstein, Sir Arthur S. Eddington, Henry Norris Russell and Otto Struve discuss the basic theories of relativity, the building of the Palomar telescope, the discovery of neutral hydrogen, and other developments that have essentially altered our view of the universe. Illustrated. $10.00

At all booksellers

HARVARD UNIVERSITY PRESS

The Diplomacy of Economic Development

LACK

HARVARD

THE CREATIVE ARTS IN AMERICAN EDUCATION

KERR

HARVARD

DUNLOP ARBISON
MEYERS

HARVARD

THE ECONOMICS OF DEFENSE IN THE NUCLEAR AGE

Hitch & McKean

SOURCE BOOK IN ASTRONOMY

1900-1950

BOOKS

South of the Dream

RALPH McGILL

	Canisters	1 lb	1½ lb
Darjeeling	$2.85	1.50
India Blend	2.90	1.38
Fancy Flavored Ceylon	3.15	1.68
Assam	3.00	1.58
English Breakfast	2.65	1.48
Imperial Russian Style	3.00	1.80
Irish Style	2.90	1.53
Smoky Lapsoong Mixtures	4.00	2.08
(Earl Grey Style)	3.75	1.95
Pinhead Gunpowder	2.80	1.48
Young Hyson	2.95	1.55
Green P. F. Japan	2.95	1.55
Uncolored B. F. Japan	2.95	1.55
Formosa Oolong	3.95	2.65
Jasmine	2.70	1.43
Mixed B.L.-Gr.-Oolong

Discover your favorite among these exotic teas—ACCLAIMED BY COGNOSSEURS AND FOOD EDITORS THE COUNTRY OVER for distinctive flavor and heart-warming satisfaction.

SPECIAL!
CARAVEL "Taste Test" ASSORTMENT

Here is an "Adventure in Flavor" for tea lovers. 16 gold-lacquered trial-size tins of all the above listed Teas—10 to 12 cupfuls in each.

only $2.95

Individual Tins..... 25c ea.

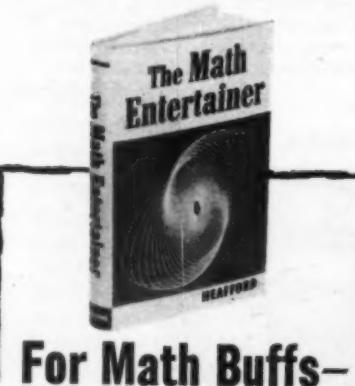

A GRAND GIFT! Your gift orders handled carefully and handsomely packed on request. No extra charge. Satisfaction guaranteed.

29TH YEAR

"Serving America's Finest Families"

CARAVEL COFFEE CO.

37-60-77th St. Dept. A Jackson Heights 72, L.I., N.Y.

For Math Buffs—

THE MATH ENTERTAINER is the title of a brand new treasure trove of mathematical teasers, ticklers, puzzles, two-player games, jests and gyrations—by the hundred! to baffle, amuse, and bewilder (perhaps—whisper it softly)—but not to disgust. Includes: math history, symbols, circles, triangles, measures, money, series, permutations, abbreviations, roots and powers, math instruments, ratios, arrangements, fractions, shapes, "Brierick" problems, true-and-false identifications, logarithms, associations, statistics, calculus "cocktails," measurements, figures from figures, arches, codes, problems and puzzles, etc., etc. Some of the posers will seem easy, others hard, some will amuse, others exasperate—but none are dull.

Answers and complete explanations are given for all problems. Illustrated. ORDER NOW!

THE MATH ENTERTAINER

By Philip Haefner
 $2.95 Postfree. 30-Day Money Back Guarantee.
 EMERSON BOOKS, Inc., Dept. 106-M
 251 West 18 Street, New York 11

THE BURDEN OF SOUTHERN HISTORY, by C. Vann Woodward. Louisiana State University Press. $3.50.

Back in 1938 when I sat down to read C. Vann Woodward's Tom Watson: Agrarian Rebel, I knew right away that I was reading Southern history and that previously I had wasted too much time on stuff that fitted Henry Ford's definition of history as "bunk." Indeed, I never managed to condemn Mr. Ford for that statement, because there was always the chance he had been reading the more popular Southern historians.

When I had done with the Watson book I was so stirred I went by bus, car, and rail over the old Populist areas of south Georgia hunting up old men who had been fierce Watson adherents and who had seen men killed and beaten for so being. He was a strange and tragic man, Tom Watson, a harsh mixture of good and evil. He left his mark deeply on my region. But, though I had read much, I never had a good window through which to look at him and the Populist period in the South, of which he became a major symbol, until Vann Woodward opened it.

Reunion and Reaction (1951) was light in darkness. Origins of the New South (1951) for the first time brought the South fully into focus. The Strange Career of Jim Crow (1955) contributed sanity when the White Citizens' Councils and the Southern politicians were strenuously advocating, and practicing, madness. Woodward has never compromised with the racist politicians or apologists for those so-called customs which the Citizens' Councils insist they hold most dear. Nor has he even once been of any comfort to those Southern newspaper editors and columnists whom the novelist James Street once described as "bellhops of Southern reaction." The Southerner who reads Vann Woodward learns what has happened to him and his region, but he does not feel pardoned, and certainly not excused, for what is wrong. He is given a pride in the best of his history and is encouraged through understanding to make no peace with those who strive to keep the South separate from America and her future.

In short, I am a Woodward fan.

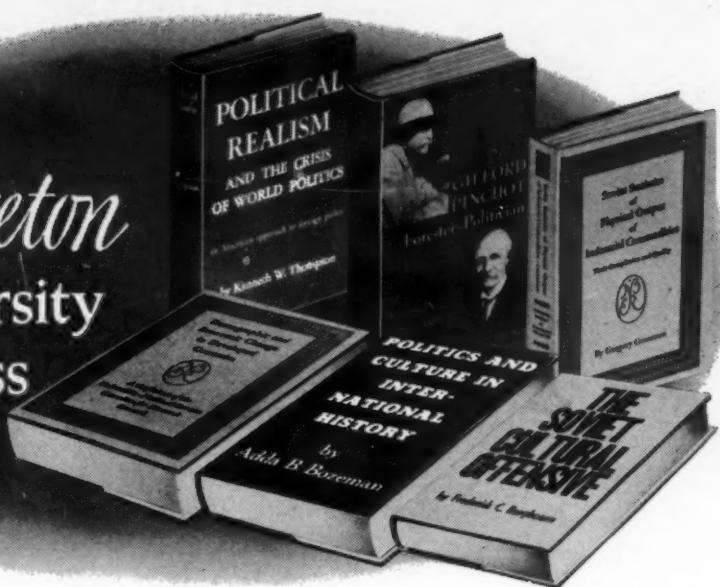

His newest book consists of eight essays which, with one exception, have already appeared in various publications during the past eight years. The exception is "A Southern Critique for the Gilded Age," in which Woodward presents Herman Melville, Henry Adams, and Henry James, each in the role of indirect critic of the post-Civil War American society. With artificial nostalgia, they extolled the superiority of the old Southern tradition of leisure based on slavery in literary works featuring a Confederate hero who censured Yankee morals and manners. Adams did so under a pen name, and James was careful to have his hero denounce slavery and the Confederate war policies, but all three mourned, in the manner of Miniver Cheevey, for the perfection of Greek culture which each wistfully imagined was the hallmark of the old slave South.

In "The Historical Dimension" Woodward takes up the Southern writers who came along beginning about 1929. They had, and most still have after more than three decades, an acute historical consciousness. A great deal of this consciousness, however, is pretty thin stuff. It is often merely narrow partisanship in which a genuine regional consciousness is difficult to identify. This obsession with the past distinguishes many Southern writers, and also can become quite tiresome.

The Southern Agrarians, who in 1930 took their stand on the values of the Old South, along with Melville et al., have long ago departed Vanderbilt University and Nash.

(Continued on page 51)

Princeton University Press

POLITICS AND CULTURE IN INTERNATIONAL HISTORY

By Adda B. Bozeman. This timely book fully explains the ways in which ancient civilizations established cultural systems that not only persist today, but grow in importance as new republics seek to establish national identities. $10.00

DEMOGRAPHIC AND ECONOMIC CHANGE IN DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

National Bureau of Economic Research, Special Conference Series, 11. A comprehensive survey of the economic effects of population change in Europe, North America, Japan, Australia, and the Soviet Union. Tables, charts. $12.00

GIFFORD PINCHOT

Forester-Politician

By M. Nelson McGahey. The colorful first biography of a great figure in American history. Gifford Pinchot, twice-elected Progressive governor of Pennsylvania, came to know every President from Grant to Truman in his efforts to secure the conservation of America's natural resources. $8.50

THE SOVIET CULTURAL OFFENSIVE

By Frederick C. Barghoorn. A major aspect of East-West relations and its impact on the cold war is analyzed in this important study of the methods by which the Soviet state exploits international cultural exchange. $7.50

SOVIET STATISTICS OF PHYSICAL OUTPUT OF INDUSTRIAL COMMODITIES

Their Compilation and Quality

By Gregory Grossman. This book provides a sound basis for evaluating Soviet claims for industrial growth, indicating the obstacles within the Soviet economy itself that prevent a free and accurate flow of information. Published for The National Bureau of Economic Research. $4.50

POLITICAL REALISM AND THE CRISIS OF WORLD POLITICS

By Kenneth W. Thompson. Traces the principles supported by political realists and applies them to fundamental problems in foreign policy and world politics. "A book that declares war on illusions... The framework of political realism which he (Thompson) presents should be listened to and respected."—Washington Post & Times Herald $5.00

At your bookstore

Princeton

University Press

Princeton, New Jersey

THE REPORTER Puzzle

Acrostickler No. 19

by HENRY ALLEN

DIRECTIONS

- 1) Each crossword definition contains two clues. One is a conventional synonym; the other a pun, anagram, or play on words.
- 2) Letters from the acrostic should be transferred to the corresponding squares in the crossword, and vice versa.
- 3) The initial letters of the correct words in the acrostic will, when read down, spell out the name of a prominent person.

A 172 66 178 10 118 54 90
 String toys or trousers. (3,4)

B
 72 150 216 160 158 36 100 106
 With Word F, famous Latin exclamation. (1,7,1,5)

C 70 148 6 83 184 40 56 120 194 10
 212 62 190 14
 "Whatsoever passeth through the _____" (5,2,3,4) Psalm 8.

D
 60 208 92 180 136 96
 To raise a design in a fabric by pressing.

E
 130 58 110 164 2 174 192 68 116 140
 26 152 88 42 8 Least parts (4,3,7)

F 196 86 182 222 48
 See Word B.

G 52 156 168 34 154 214 46
 Most unremitting.

H
 28 162 4 64 140 186 218 36 20
 Ship Hornblower defeated twice in the Pacific. C.S. Forester, Beat to Quarters.

I 78 134 124 74 166 30
 Small Mediterranean vessels.

J
 143 206 200 138 24 76
 Effects of pollen on seed or fruit.

K
 202 108 16 80 210
 Author of Emperor and Galilean, etc. et al.

L
 50 224 198 128 220 32 98
 Persistently annoys.

M 176 44 126 18 188 170 12
 Soiled.

Across

16. Five hundred in North African port may walk.
23. Former speaker is a drink too?
46. Another title of Acrostician. (3,6,2,4).
76. Six in old Rome hear French head of six.
85. Scientist mere coals.
106. Batboy known? Why not? He heads a monastery.
116. A famous lover toils.
136. Sat in a lee? No. Yes, ask in Tel-Aviv for an undergarment.
145. Atlas wears half his doublet finally.
166. Comparable to letter-writing.
196. Not an extremity in the act of giving displeasure. (6,2)
205. One may be a naval secretary.

Down

2. Let the bat be at the lowest point.
4. Tasty item in the same place short in a doublet.
6. Five o'clock necessities ease doublets. (3,4)
8. Help! Moth (in clothes, but it fines.)
10. Porter, nothing! He's a state of mind.
12. Bides with a full house and shams to stay.
14. Sire embraces 2000. He'll get her.
109. Cuts, old boy? Let's face them.
126. How Hamlet addresses the players, when he dies at bay.
128. Formerly, Ezra. Explain!
130. Wedge periods of power which never came for Alice.
137. Fool around in ski clothes. The coil's out of South African gear.
147. British poet in Ireland or Scotland.

ville. Only Donald Davidson remains on the burned-out deck as a sort of Dixie mullah, daily facing toward John C. Calhoun's grave and calling on all those engaged in trying to grapple with the new problems to repent and pray for a return of the Old South. Dr. Davidson, a deeply sincere man, winces at the phrase "segregated society." The South, he insists, had developed not a segregated but a parallel society which, he seems to believe, has been highly satisfactory in its values to both races.

Now and then one gets the impression that Woodward, too, is disturbed by the sound of bulldozers that are leveling traditions as well as trees, but he is too honest a man and historian to give aid and comfort to the various wistful cultists of the old days, be they Melville or the newer breed.

It is, of course, perfectly true that the South is a distinctive region. This is so not at all because of its myths and ancestor worship; it stems from the collective experience of the Southern people. Generations of scarcity, want, and a lost war do constitute one of the distinctive historical experiences of the Southern people. Americans outside the South have not known the chastening experience of being on the losing side of a war. Success and victory are an American state of mind. That of the South does include large amounts of defeat, frustration, and failure.

Southerners, says Woodward in the excellent essay "Search for Identity," have lauded the perfection of American institutions since the Declaration of Independence. But for half that time they lived intimately with a great social evil and the other half with its aftermath. Much of the South's intellectual energy went into a desperate effort to convince the world that its peculiar evil was a positive good, but—and here is the point—it failed even to convince itself.

"The South's preoccupation was with guilt," Woodward declares, "not with innocence, with the reality of evil, not with the dream of perfection. Its experience in this respect, as in several others, was on the whole a thoroughly un-American one."

All this is true. And the average

Southerner is not yet aware of what his heritage is. Selections from Woodward are not yet required reading in Southern secondary schools. In many of them the old myths, somewhat less iridescent, are still being vended.

I couldn't agree more positively with Woodward's conclusion: "The modern Southerner should be secure enough in his national identity to escape the compulsion of less secure minorities to embrace uncritically all the myths of nationalism." He should, therefore, be ready to become an American national in spirit and mind, without becoming a nationalist.

After all, what really makes the Southerner's heritage "different" is that the South's power structure of 1861 preferred to plunge the nation into a civil war rather than give up the profits obtained from cotton, rice, tobacco, and slavery. This is oversimplified, but it is the nut of the matter. The modern Southerner owes the heritage of that decision no more than understanding. Once he understands, he is freed and an almost literal weight falls from his mind and back.

The unique and lavish good fortune this country has known has isolated it, rather dangerously, from the common experience of the rest of mankind, "all the great peoples of which have without exception known the bitter taste of defeat and humiliation." This good fortune, says Woodward in the essay from which he has taken the title of his book, has fostered the tacit conviction that American ideals, values, and known principles inevitably will prevail in the end. Still, we Americans are exasperated by the incongruities of our position. We have more power than ever before, and enjoy less security.

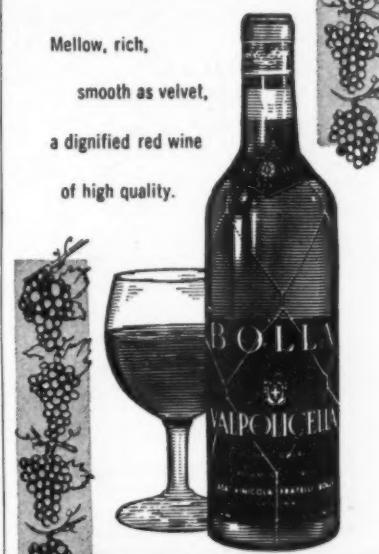

The South's history presents an ironic contrast. In 1860 the South had grown so sensitive to criticism and the apparent denials of its proclaimed virtues that its exasperations led to disaster.

IN 1960 we have shown, according to Woodward, a tendency to allow our whole cause, our traditional values, and our way of life to be identified with one economic institution. We have shown a disposition

OUTSTANDING WINES from ITALY

BOLLA VALPOLICELLA

Special Reserve

Mellow, rich, smooth as velvet,
a dignified red wine of high quality.

U.S.A. DISTRIBUTORS
FONTANA-HOLLYWOOD CORP.
NEW YORK

MOPPER® the original "one-size-fits-all" TERRY AFTER-BATH ROBE

Here's the great big, wonderful "terry bear" of a robe that towels you dry instantly, cozily after tub, shower or swim! It's a whopper of a Mopper! Tailored of thick, thirsty, snow-white Cannon terry, with yards of comfortable fullness, raglan sleeves, draft-screen collar, tassel tie, wrap-around belt, two big "carry-all" pockets! Personalized with press-on monogram. Fits men, women perfectly. For 6-footers, order king-size, only $1.00 more. Order several; for gifts, for guests, for family! Sorry, no C.O.D.s.

Gift-ready in clear plastic bag. $7.95 ea.
Free 3" monogram (specify)
Add 35¢ pte. each Mopper. (Save! 2 for $15)

Gift catalog free, on request.
WOODMERE MILLS, INC.
DEPT. C37 BENNINGTON, VERMONT

OXFORD BOOKS FOR POLITICAL AWARENESS

DEFENCE BY COMMITTEE

The British Committee of Imperial Defence 1885-1959

By FRANKLYN A. JOHNSON. The first full-length study of that remarkable body of politico-military advisers to the Prime Minister which served as the prototype for the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff and the National Security Council.

$8.00

INDEPENDENT IRAQ, 1932-1958

A Study in Iraqi Politics
Second Edition

By MAJID KHADDURI. A new edition of the first inside story of Iraqi political developments by an Iraqi writer. New material has been added from captured German archives and published and unpublished memoirs. (Royal Institute of International Affairs.)

Map. $7.20

NEHRU

A Political Biography

By MICHAEL BRECHER. Nehru "realizes that Dr. Brecher's criticisms are devastating, the more devastating because he is such a friendly and admiring critic; yet he feels that every criticism is justified." —TATA ZINKIN, Economic Weekly, Bombay. 32 halftones.

$8.50

At your bookstore

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

to suppress criticism and glorify rigidly orthodox capitalistic free enterprise as the sole secret of our superiority. Any and all attempts to change this orthodoxy historically have been met with charges of socialism, creeping and galloping. We have too often sought to impose our form of democracy on all those allied with us or aided by us. Of late many shrill voices demand that we affirm our national perfection.

Today it is America, as once it was the South alone, that stands in great need of understanding its own history. We need leaders, historians, and great writers who will "penetrate the legend" without destroying the ideal. Some of this leadership and those writers may reasonably be expected to rise out of the South.

Capping The Spring

JOHN KENNETH GALBRAITH

THE TREND IS UP, by Anthony West.
Random House. $4.95.

This is the story of a lad from New England who decides to make a lot of money. He moves to Florida, makes a small fortune, marries a Marquand-type girl from home who is in need of a husband, has children, goes to war, and returns to make a big fortune. As this wealth accumulates, he, and especially his wife, decay. Rarely has there been a novel by a good writer that is more in need of cutting. Odd characters wander aimlessly in and out to no essential purpose. One statuesque but artificial blonde, improbably cast as a governess, comes into the story twice —once available but frigid and then, after some hormone shots, available and almost uncontrollably responsive. Toward the end the alcoholic wife, at least temporarily dried out, goes on a camping tour of Turkey and the adjacent desert which makes the movements of the late Lemuel Gulliver a model of plausibility by comparison. I suspect Mr. West of using John O'Hara's device of relieving tedium by tumbling his characters into a bed or the nearest available substitute at regular intervals. But Mr. West lacks his mentor's mastery of detail, and something is lost for the average reader from the circumstance that the sexes are so often the same.

Yet I am persuaded that The Trend Is Up is a novel with an important point, although I am not impressed by what happened to the people. Gavin Hatfield is a lot more civilized and sensitive than the average Florida moneymaker and remains so to the end. His wife could just as easily have become a high-class rum-pot, to use Damon Runyon's term, had her need for a husband taken her to some rentier's house in Dedham or Chestnut Hill. I could not make out what was supposed to have happened to the children; they seemed to me both better and more ordinary than one might have expected.

The society and community of which the Hatfields form such an important part becomes progressively more banal, a feature which Mr. West communicates to the reader with amusing skill. Thus the town of Maramee, where Hatfield made his pile, was founded by a small-bore pirate named Pedro Nunez who had landed there in the distant past to butcher some Indians and rape their women. He returns each year to participate in ceremonies that are the climax of a gay civic festival. In recent years the skull and bones have disappeared from his ensign; only the cross remains. As he lands, he is preceded by a prelate. Not even the early Eisenhower administration could have outdone him in piety.

But Mr. West reserves his talent not for the degradation of the people or the community but for the effect of the commercial culture on the countryside. The town to which Gavin Hatfield came some thirty years ago was a pleasant place in a green and graceful land. There was still some unsightly wreckage from the boom of the twenties, but this—the great welcoming arch on the highway near town was one example—was becoming mellow and innocuous. Not far from town, in a grove of live oaks, a great spring boiled up from the ground to make a spot of pure enchantment.

This was all destroyed. The trees were capped made which the pa mercia lined comm wife serts person raised rectan roun

I th invit it is makes ple an will n ugline

WI
To

T CH
$12.50.

Few promi in our by th tioner design Morri
to the Stijl twenti an am which another tions that w cal em have chine of hu the n have our ce world rhetor tellec who l ture o

Novem

nearest intertentor's ning is om the are so

The
with an am not to the t more e averremains just as s rum-s term, taken n Ded-ld not o have they l more ve exuity of an im-ressively h Mr. reader e town made ll-bore no had past to e their o par-re the

In res have ; only s, he is t even stration society.

talent people e effect on the which thirty e in a re was e from this-on the sample innocugrove led up pot of the trees

ORTER

were cut down. The spring was capped and piped. Even the old arch made way for a multilane highway which cut at an efficient angle across the park. The roads are a great commercial asset, so naturally they are lined with billboards and messy commercial enterprises. After his wife leaves him, Gavin Hatfield deserts the incongruous but ample and personable house where he had raised his family and moves to the rectangular and harmonized surroundings of a hotel penthouse.

I think Mr. West may have been inviting concern for his people. But it is the countryside for which he makes one weep. Indeed, if his people are degraded and destroyed, it will not be by the wealth but by the ugliness that they have created.

What Happened To the Future?

HILTON KRAMER

THEORY AND DESIGN IN THE FIRST MACHINE AGE, by Reyner Banham. Praeger. $12.50.

Few movements in the arts have promised more far-reaching changes in our lives than those put forward by the great theorists and practitioners of modern architecture and design. From Ruskin and William Morris in the nineteenth century to the modernist thinkers of the De Stijl and Bauhaus groups in the twentieth, we have been treated to an amazing series of Utopian visions which claimed, in one degree or another, to improve on the conditions of life by means of designs that would radically alter our physical environment. Whereas our poets have tended to look upon the machine age as a threat to the survival of humane values, the visionaries of the modern movement in design have welcomed the technology of our century as the key to a better world. It was not only fanatical rhetoricians like Marinetti, the intellectual leader of the Futurists, who looked upon the inherited culture of the past as a corpse that would finally be buried by the machine-made civilization to come. Even so gentle a thinker as the Dutch painter Piet Mondrian, himself the leader of a school of abstraction that was often accused of a detachment from life and the only artist of that persuasion whose work can seriously be compared to the great art of the past, wrote an essay not long before his death sixteen years ago in which he declared: "In the future, the realization of pure plastic expression in palpable reality will replace the work of art. . . . Then we will no longer have the need of pictures and sculpture, for we will live in realized art." Visions of the future that have drawn their inspiration from modern design have rarely been less than total.

Yet, for all the dreams that have been offered us in the name of new and better worlds, we have lived to see both modern design and the technology it serves become the instruments of bureaucracy, standardization, and dehumanization on a mass scale. Everything from our traffic jams to the refrigerated air and light in which modern office workers spend the bulk of their waking life makes us cynical about the high spiritual promises of modern design. We are left, in fact, with the conviction that, far from determining the shape of the world we live in, our architecture and design have dragged along behind the momentum of modern life, providing elegant physical containers for a style of living that the designers (as well as the rest of us) have been helpless to change for the better.

REYNER BANHAM, the brilliant architectural critic of the New Statesman and intellectual mainstay of the London Architectural Review, has written a book which clearly outlines the principal theories and achievements of European architecture and design in the first three decades of the century. Though clearly partisan to the accomplishments of modern architecture, Mr. Banham nevertheless leaves one with a vivid sense of the great discrepancies that separate promise from fulfillment in this sphere. Theory and Design in the First Machine Age is in some ways an odd book:

XPEIAZETAI BOHOEIA*

*He Needs Help

The walls of Demetrios' house in the slums of Athens are cracked. Icy winds blow right on his face while he sleeps. His blanket is threadbare. He eats one meal a day—bread dipped in oil.

Demetrios' mother has tuberculosis and is hospitalized. His father, a rag man, earns $13 a month. Demetrios does not pray for a blanket or more food. He prays to grow up quickly so that he can help his parents.

How you can help...

You, your group, your school can give person-to-person help to a needy girl or boy in Greece, Korea, Italy, Finland, France, Lebanon, West Germany or Austria through a Save the Children Federation Sponsorship. Your monthly contribution of $12.50 will provide your sponsored child with supplementary food, warm clothing, household goods and cash. You will receive a photograph and the story of the child you are helping and the child or his family will correspond with you. Please fill in the coupon below and join with thousands of SCF sponsors in a warm, rewarding experience.

SCF NATIONAL SPONSORS INCLUDE:
MRS. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER
HON. HERBERT HOOVER
SPYROS SKOURAS

Registered with U. S. State Department
Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid

Serving Children for 29 Years

SAVE THE CHILDREN FEDERATION

Boston Post Road, Norwalk, Connecticut

I want a girl boy in _____ (countries listed above) or where the need is greatest

Enclosed is my first payment:

$12.50 a month $37.50 a quarter

$75 semi-annually $150 annually

I cannot sponsor a child but enclosed is my contribution of $_____

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

Contributions are income tax deductible. RE-11-0 are you a unitarian without knowing it?

Do you believe that religious truth cannot be contrary to truth from any other source?

Do you believe man is capable of self-improvement and is not condemned by "original sin?"

Do you believe that striving to live a whole-some life is more important than accepting religious creeds?

Do you believe in the practical application of universal brotherhood?

Then you are professing Unitarian beliefs.

Send for 32-page illustrated booklet, "Introducing Unitarianism."

Mall this Coupon with 25¢ to UNITARIAN LAYMEN'S LEAGUE
Dept. RX4, 25 Beacon St., Boston 8, Mass.

Please send me "Introducing Unitarianism"

Name _____

Address _____

LOOK AHEAD!

Mr. Magoo says you can't afford to be near-sighted about cancer. Too dangerous. Too much to lose. Maybe your life.

Got to look ahead. Play it safe. Many cancers can be cured if detected early and treated promptly.

Be far-sighted. Have a health checkup every year. It could save your life.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

scholarly and even pedantic at times, it is written all the same in a very lively style, full of thrusts and gibes at accepted reputations and received opinion. It conveys a graphic and often moving picture of the personal intellectual struggles that have determined the course of modern design, and yet Mr. Banham is clearly not interested in personalities as such but only in the degree to which a particular personality, a special outlook, a new or freshly stated idea, made a difference in what was actually thought and built. His book has at times an almost cinematic construction; it "cuts," often very abruptly, from close-ups of particular documents and manifestoes to a more detached and historical view of what concepts and precedents actually determined—apart from rhetorical obfuscation—the way certain buildings were designed and made.

As a historian not only of buildings but of ideas, Mr. Banham has obviously felt the need to come up with a style of exposition that would accommodate a rather lumpy assortment of materials: pedagogical theories, architectural histories, avant-garde proclamations, technological advances, the commerce of building, and the often subtle dialectic of received precedent and genuine innovation. He has succeeded, I think, by adopting a somewhat breathless but admirably concise approach to the whole tangle of movements, theories, and net results in this field, and one of the main reasons for his success is what can only be called a genius for apt quotation. As a result, Theory and Design in the First Machine Age is, inter alia, a brilliant anthology of the principal theoretical positions in the modern movement.

The whole panorama of early twentieth-century design in Europe is covered in detail. As Mr. Banham states in his introduction, he conceives the entire evolution of the theory and design of modern architecture to have taken place under the aegis of two basic attitudes of mind: Futurist dynamism on the one hand and academic caution on the other. He thus deals not only with the major figures and styles of the avant-garde—with Gropius, Oud, Mondrian, van Doesburg, Mendelsohn, Malevitsch, Lissitsky, Le Cor-busier, Mies van der Rohe, Klee, Moholy-Nagy, Duchamp, Marinetti, Boccioni, and the dozens of other artists, designers, and publicists who created what we still regard as "modern"—but also with the academic tradition that remained a hidden but fundamental source of modernist achievements. In fact, Mr. Banham's chapters on the influence of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts and particularly of Julien Guadet's compendium of its principles, of the writings of Auguste Choisy and Geoffrey Scott, of the early buildings of Garnier, Perret, and Behrens, are fully as persuasive and as relevant to his accounts of modernism as anything he says about the later and more obviously dynamic events. This is historical writing of the first order; it leaves one's sense of the period permanently clarified. One will never again be able to regard the academic and the avant-garde as quite so disengaged from each other's pursuits as the old polemics tried to make out.

FOR ALL his scholarly documentation, however, Mr. Banham's view of the modern movement as a mingling of innovation and academic precedent is arrived at (one suspects) as much from the leaning of his own mind as from the evidence at hand. It is doubtless true of all historical writing—and it is surely true of Mr. Banham's—that the past brought so vividly to life has a curiously precise resemblance to the contours of the author's own outlook. Mr. Banham is at once a historian (concerned with the past) and a polemical critic (concerned to influence the future). In the latter role his prose, particularly as it is displayed in his introductory essay, fairly shimmers with the old-time religion of the machine. Like many historians of the modern period, he suffers from a nostalgia for something promised but not yet realized. His partiality to Futurism, which after all produced little or nothing in the way of functioning architecture, can only be explained by his sharing in its longing for a complete break with the past. Yet the past is Mr. Banham's vocation. He is, in a way, a Futurist historian, which is practically a contradiction in terms. His real subject matter,

thought
histo could quest moder doors futur beaut lofty tion.
ham other Ban the r porta ing a

Ar

THE by Murie so m for t reach serves best t writes her o ity, b hard ture o ness a some timing best l been p conve oak. .
porary Else I put u Lou child.
Mrs. sensib opini Aust among shiny Natur prayer black her. S local good not a

Novem

Klee, inetti, other ts who rd as e ac-ned a ce of fact, e influx-Arts ader's of the y and buildehrens, s reernism e later events.
e first of the l. One regard t-garde n each polemics

though it focuses on the past, as histories must—even the Futurists couldn't change that—is the nagging question that Futurism and all the modern movements have left on our doorstep: What has happened to the future? It once looked so brave and beautiful; it once held out such lofty dreams of freedom and realization. Like everyone else, Mr. Banham has no answer. But unlike most other writers on the subject, Mr. Banham has given us an account of the recent past that will figure importantly in any constructive thinking about the future.

An Uncanny Aim

ANN BIRSTEIN

THE GO-AWAY BIRD AND OTHER STORIES, by Muriel Spark. Lippincott. $3.75.

Muriel Spark is the kind of writer so many people have discovered for themselves that she is finally reaching the wide audience she deserves. Not only is she good, at her best there is no one like her, and she writes in a voice that is distinctly her own. Mrs. Spark's special quality, because she is inimitable, is very hard to describe. It is a strange mixture of the most penetrating seriousness and also the illusion that, like some comedian famous for his timing, she is throwing away her best lines: "The Black Madonna had been given to the church by a recent convert. It was carved out of bog oak. . . . Looks a bit like contemporary art. . . . It's old-fashioned. Else how'd it get sanctioned to be put up?" To this very dark Virgin, Lou Parker decides to pray for a child. It is a natural decision, since Mrs. Parker is "not a snob, only sensible," and of such advanced opinions that she considers Jane Austen "too Victorian," and counts among her friends two very dark, shiny gentlemen from Jamaica. Naturally, however, when her prayers are rewarded by a pitch-black baby, it is all too much for her. She gives it away. And does the local priest think she has done a good thing? her husband asks. "No, not a good thing. In fact, he said it would have been a good thing if we could have kept the baby. But failing that, we did the right thing. Apparently, there's a difference."

It has been suggested that one of the reasons Mrs. Spark's work was slow to catch on in the beginning is that, like all very funny writers, she was not always taken seriously. This is true; but now that she has caught on, I think that perhaps a worse injustice is being done her, and that is the tendency to regard her as essentially a stylist and to refer to her work as "flawless" or "seamless." A dubious compliment, and the kind often paid to lady writers, who are not, as a group, inclined to chest thumping and other forms of literary violence. But the suggestion is that more attention is paid to making those little seams invisible than to anything else. Actually, Mrs. Spark is always deeply involved with her subject, and her range is extraordinary and sometimes terrifying. Those who have read her novel Memento Mori (now in a Meridian paperback) know that death is a frequent and not unfriendly visitor in her work. In this collection, the narrator of one story, "The Portobello Road," is a girl murdered five years before; another concerns Selwyn MacGregor, "the nicest boy who ever committed the sin of whiskey," who contemplates corruption from his home by the side of a graveyard; and "The Go-Away Bird" itself, a lovely and subtle novella, is about a young girl doomed, no matter how much the call of a bird lures her away from Africa, to submit to a tragically ironic death there.

Mrs. Spark's habit is to hit lightly and then back away, and as a rule her aim is uncanny. Where she is most likely to miss is, I think, in some of her shorter work. Like all writers who attempt to turn our heads in a direction we had not thought of looking before, she needs time to accustom us to this unfamiliar perspective. Otherwise, the effect is not so much fleeting as too constricted, and there are several stories in this collection where one wishes she had lingered longer and tried for more. But where she does allow herself this latitude—as in "The Go-Away Bird" and "The Black Madonna"—the effect is unexpectedly powerful.

MEN AND MOVEMENTS

Exciting new series about political and social nonconformists in America and the controversial minority movements which they led.

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, LIBERAL OF THE 1920's

D. Joy Humes

The most outspoken liberal of his day and the causes he fought for as an individual and as editor of The Nation.

November $4.50

HENRY A. WALLACE: QUIXOTIC CRUSADE 1948

Karl M. Schmidt

The blow-by-blow account of the Wallace Progressive Party and of one of the strangest presidential campaigns in our history.

November $5.50

Order now from your bookseller

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY PRESS SYRACUSE 10, NEW YORK

Easter Dawn

GOUVERNEUR PAULDING

YEARS OF CHILDHOOD, by Sergey Aksakov. Newly translated with an Introduction by Alec Brown. Random House: Vintage Russian Library. $1.65.

Aksakov's childhood was spent on his family's country estate deep in central Russia, far from the fashionable world of St. Petersburg or Moscow. Because this Russian child's memories of the countryside and the seasons are so much like those of any American who can remember a country childhood in a land as yet uncluttered with automobiles—chestnuts roasting beneath raked-up autumn leaves, skids placed under carriage wheels before attempting the steep descent, getting down from the carriage to walk beside it up the steep hill, wild geese in formation overhead, wild flowers piercing the snow in spring, rivulets from the melting snow—it comes as a surprise to read that the child Aksakov one day heard his parents announce that the Empress Catherine was dead and how dreadfully in bad taste it was that the provincial governor was giving a ball in order to show his delight in her successor.

Aksakov was born in 1791. Because an American so easily shares his nostalgia it comes as a surprise, too, that his family had serfs, villages of them, and that they knelt in the fields when the family sallied forth in their carriage to observe them at work. But it comes as no surprise at all that the child Aksakov should wonder, with the American, why there was such a disparity between those born to command and those born to obey. The Russian child asked his parents—they were very kind, not despots, even ineffectual—and they had no answer. The child watched his grandmother inspect a bundle of goat's down that a serf had been carding for the spinning wheel: there were coarse hairs in it. "Grandmother held it to the light, then . . . with one hand grabbed this girl by her hair, while with the other she fetched out a plaited whip from under the pillows and began to thrash the poor girl . . . I ran away."

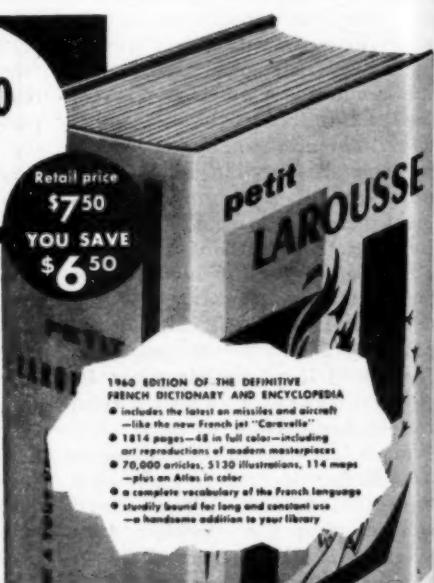

Passing centuries mean nothing: the Russian child was as sensitive to pleasure and to pain—and as lachrymose when confronted with either—as the young Jean-Jacques Rousseau (or the young Saint Augustine); he was as desperately in love with his mother as was Proust; but it is hard to find anyone (Wordsworth, Thoreau, perhaps, or rather, a painter?) with whom his love of nature and the grace and precision with which he portrays it can be compared. "But who would have read, who would have bothered with writing, when the sweet wild cherry bloomed, when the buds on the birches were breaking . . . when from morning till night the skylarks hung in the air . . . when the small tortoiseshell and brimstone butterflies came fluttering past and the bumble bees and the honey bees buzzed about me, when there was motion in the waters and a murmuring on dry land, a quiver in the air . . ."

That Easter morning the child overslept; already the sun was high. The child ran to the window: "The dear sun's dancing," he cried out, "rejoicing in Christ's resurrection."

Just published!
The first truly new
"PETIT LAROUSSE" in fifty years!

Only $1.00 with membership in the French Book Guild

Retail price
$7.50
YOU SAVE $6.50

JOIN THE CLUB TODAY

HERE IT IS . . . the NEW Petit Larousse! NEW format—NEW facts—NEW art reproductions—NEW in the method of printing for easier reading—NEW in everything except the dedication to embrace every sphere of interest and knowledge which has made its predecessor, the Nouveau Petit Larousse Illustré, the only book of its kind in the world! And, now, by joining the French Book Guild which brings the most-talked-about French best-sellers to your door for only a fraction of book store prices, you get the NEW Petit Larousse for only $1.00!

MEMBERSHIP IS FREE

It costs nothing to join the French Book Guild . . . no dues, no fees. As a member, you choose the books you want from the descriptive brochure mailed to you each month—and purchase them for only $1.96 each plus 24¢ postage (occasional selections at slightly higher prices)—instead of at retail prices up to $3.50 and higher. In addition, you receive a FREE "Bonus Book" with each fourth selection accepted!

By mailing the enclosed coupon you get your copy of the NEW Petit Larousse for only $1.00 (you save $6.50)—plus your choice of ONE of the French best-sellers shown here as your first selection for only $1.96 . . . a total value of up to $13.25 for only $2.96 (plus postage). You may continue membership for as long as you wish, or you may cancel after you have accepted only three more selections. But hurry! Mail the coupon today and be among the first to own the NEW Petit Larousse . . . and of one "first selection" books offered here for the very first time!

LE SALUT (1944-1946) by General de Gaulle. 2 Vols. The triumphant liberation of France and the immediate years. $1.96. Retail $3.75.
LES MAITRES DE LA LITTERATURE by Emile Henriet of the Académie Française. 2 Vols. An up-to-date condensed history of literature. Retail $5.00.
LA MODIFICATION by Michel Butor. Prix Renaudot. Avant-garde novel, widely hailed, won the author universal acclaim. Retail $2.95.

CHAQUE HOMME DANS SA NUIT by Julian Green. Just out. Soul searching novel of passion and conflict of conscience. Retail $4.00.

LA GLOIRE DE MON PÈRE by Marcel Pagnol of the Académie Française. Amusing and tender autobiography of the author's childhood. Retail $2.50. (not illustrated)

UN METIER DE SEIGNEUR by Pierre Bourde. Spine tingling story of an intellectual spy, by the author of "Bridge Over the River Kwai." Retail $3.50.

1940 EDITION OF THE DEFINITIVE FRENCH DICTIONARY AND ENCYCLOPEDIA

- includes the latest on missiles and aircraft—like the new French jet "Caravelle"
- 1814 pages—48 in full color—including art reproductions of modern masterpieces
- 70,000 articles, 5130 illustrations, 114 maps—plus an Atlas in color
- a complete vocabulary of the French language
- sturdy bound for long and constant use
- a handsome addition to your library

The French Book Guild, Dept. R-11, 1860 Broadway, N.Y. 23, N.Y.
Please enroll me in the French Book Guild, send me my "Petit Larousse," and the book checked as my first selection and bill me $2.96 plus postage ($1.00 for "Larousse," $1.96 for my first selection). I agree to accept a minimum of three more selections during the coming twelve months and I am to receive a valuable "Bonus Book" free with each four selections I accept.

LE SALUT LA GLOIRE DE MON PÈRE
 LES MAITRES DE LA LITTERATURE UN METIER DE SEIGNEUR
 LA MODIFICATION CHAQUE HOMME DANS SA NUIT

Name _____
Address _____
City, Zone, State _____

THE FRENCH BOOK GUILD 1860 Broadway, New York 23, N.Y.